POSTPONEMENT OF CONSIDERATION OF COPYRIGHT CONVENTION

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the first item on the Executive Calendar is a copyright convention, which has been there since April 11 of this year. This is not the first time the Foreign Relations Committee has reported the convention for favorable action. It has been on the calendar during previous Congresses. In the meantime those who have been opposed to the consideration and ratification of this treaty have taken the stand that there should be domestic legislation reported and ready at the time the treaty is considered.

I deem it advisable for us to allow the committee, which has been working so long and so consistently in attempting to bring about a domestic law which will meet the requirements and be satisfactory to the various interested groups, that I think it would be unwise to consider the treaty at this time. Therefore, I am going to suggest, with the cooperation of the majority leader and the minority leader, that I be permitted to make the announcement that the convention will not be called up until March of next year.

As part of my remarks, to show what progress is being made by the committee, which is working upon proposed legislation along this line, I ask that a letter, signed by Edith E. Ware, and a list of the cooperating groups which constitute the Conference on Copyright Legislation, be made a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter and list were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> AMERICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON International Intellectual Cooperation, New York, N. Y., June 15, 1939.

Senator Elbert D. Thomas,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.
DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Attached is a revision of the preliminary draft of a copyright bill; it embodies the amendments and the editing of the all-day meetings of June 12 and 13. The letter to the members of the Conference on Copyright Legislation that is clipped to it explains the status. Members of the conference asked me to send this to you as evidence of their endeavor; they are not yet ready to have the draft submitted to Congress. Professor Shotwell told me yesterday that he intended to speak with you over the telephone at such time as he thought he might find you in your office.

Very sincerely yours,

EDITH E. WARE.

SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on the last call of the calendar, Senate bill 915, to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, which was introduced by my colleague [Mr. LOGAN], and which refers to administrative procedure in the Government departments, was passed. Following its passage, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Minton] moved to consider the vote by which the bill was passed. I have discussed this proposed legislation with my colleague, who is not able to be here, and I think it is generally agreed that a bill of such importance should be discussed and should not be passed on a call of the calendar without some discussion. It is entirely satisfactory to my colleague that the vote by which that bill passed should be reconsidered, and the bill be restored to the calendar, with the understanding that the measure be taken up at some date early in the next session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] that the vote by which Senate bill 915 was passed be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be restored to the calendar.

PERPETUATION OF THE EASTERN WILD TURKEY

The bill (S. 2270) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase refuge lands within the State of South Carolina for the perpetuation of the eastern wild turkey and to provide pureblood brood stock for restocking within its native range, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection. This is a bill of great importance in connection with the preservation of the wildlife of this country. The Biological Survey have gone over this particular case carefully, and they have discovered that it would lead to the preservation of the original wild turkey in certain sections of my State. They are asking for only $50,000, for a proper survey, looking to the purchase of the lands involved, and the timber that is on them will in a few years amortize any purchase which may be made. They have the cooperation of all those who are devoted to the preservation of wildlife in this country.

I cannot see how an objection can be made, in view of the fact that the wild carrier pigeon is extinct, the bison has been practically exterminated. The land proposed to be surveyed promises to be a place where this particular strain of wildlife can be preserved, and other sections can be restocked with the original variety. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield. Mr. KING. What will be the cost?

Mr. SMITH. I think the cost will be very nominal, because the bill provides that the Department shall survey the land, and then make a recommendation as to what the cost will be.

Mr. KING. How many acres are involved?

Mr. SMITH. About 30,000, but much of the land will be deeded to the Government by the persons who own it. All the particulars will be gone into when the Department has a chance to investigate. I myself am thoroughly familiar with the region. It is now gradually being encroached upon by the timber interests, and once the timber is thoroughly depleted the habitat of these birds will practically be destroyed.

I plead with the Senator to read the report of the committee as well as the report of the Biological Survey. It is a very important matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is very unwise to commit the Government to the purchase of 30,000 acres of land.

Mr. SMITH. It does not commit the Government to the purchase. It is for the survey to report to us at some time in the future what lands may be purchased.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the lands are so well known that whatever information is desirable could be obtained very readily, so that there is no necessity for a survey.

Mr. SMITH. It is not to be restricted to this particular area. The purpose is to purchase, or lease, or otherwise obtain certain lands contiguous to the ones in question, the total area being 30,000 acres, which I do not believe would cost the Government anything comparable to the value of the preservation of these birds.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we can pass the bill over for the moment. I want to offer an amendment to make it very clear that the Government is not to make any commitment to purchase, then we can take the bill up later, when we get through with the other measures on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH. I give notice that when the proper time comes I will call the bill up to be considered on its merits. It is unfortunate for it to go over on one objection. If it has to go over, I give notice that I will call it up, any objection to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate now consider Order of Business 432, which is Senate bill 2270. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Kingl objected, but I think all objection has been removed to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2270) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase refuge lands in the State of South Carolina for the perpetuation of the eastern wild turkey and to provide pureblood brood stock for restocking within its native range, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, in section 1, on page 2, line 9, after the word "therewith", to strike out "to" and insert "in", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is author-Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, gift, or lease, or, subject to the provisions of sections 302, 303, and 304 of the act of June 15, 1935 (49 Stat. 381), by exchange, approximately 30,000 acres of privately owned or State- or county-owned land, including improvements thereon, rights-of-way, and easements connected therewith, in the State of South Carolina, or such part thereof as he may determine to be necessary and best suited as a national wildlife refuge primarily for the protection and perpetuation of the eastern wild turkey, and to construct, operate, and maintain thereon such structures and other improvements as he may deem necessary for the appropriate development of the area for such purposes: Provided, That public domain and Federal lands within or contiguous to the areas acquired hereunder and not otherwise specifically reserved are also hereby authorized to be administered as part of said refuge if found by the Secretary to be suitable for the purpose.

SEC. 2. That the lands acquired in accordance with the provisions of this act shall constitute the national wild-turkey refuge and shall be maintained as a refuge and breeding place for wild animals and birds under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe from time to time for the administration of wildlife refuges: Provided, That upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary shall determine to be for the best interests of the Government, including sale in the open market, and under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, he may permit such selective cutting and lumbering operations as are not inconsistent with the well-being and effective management of wild turkeys on said refuge: Provided further, That in cooperation with other Federal, State, or local agencies, or with associations, clubs, organizations, or individuals, he may distribute, sell in open market or otherwise, or exchange surplus wild turkeys from said ref-uge for stocking, restocking, or propagating purposes, and may accept funds and other aids and enter into agreements with landowners in the development of the program authorized by this act for the perpetuation and restoration of wild turkeys, including such original or cooperative research in the problems of wild-turkey management as may be necessary to efficient expansion and promotion of the program herein authorized: And provided further. That out of any money received by the Secretary of Agriculture from the grant, sale, or disposition of any timber, wild animals, wild birds, or other products or privileges in connection with the administration of this refuge, or as a bonus upon the exchange of such animals, birds, products, or privileges, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay any processory expenses incurred in connection. is authorized to pay any necessary expenses incurred in connection with and for the purpose of effecting the removal, grant, disposition, sale, or exchange, of such animals, birds, products, or privileges; and after such deductions from gross receipts, the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute 25 percent of the net receipts of such refuge during each fiscal year to the county or counties in which the refuge is leasted preparational to its area in sech country. which the refuge is located, proportional to its area in each county, to be expended for such purposes as the county authorities or the State legislature by appropriate legislation may direct, and deposit the remaining 75 percent in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 3. That the acquisition of such land by the United States shall in no case be defeated because of rights-of-way, easements, and reservations, which from their nature will in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture in no manner interfere with the use of the lands so encumbered for the purposes of this act; but such rights-of-way, easements, and reservations, retained by the grantor or lessor from whom the United States receives title under this act, shall be subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the occupation, use, operation, protection, and administration of such land as a refuge for wildlife; and it shall be expressed in the deed or lease that the use, occupation, and operation of such rights-of-way, easements, and reservations shall be subordinate to and subject to such rules and regulations as are set out in such deed or lease or, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him from time to time.

regulations as are set out in such deed or lease or, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him from time to time.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things and make all expenditures necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the land that may be acquired under this act, including purchase of options or leases when deemed necessary, and expenses incident to the location, examination, and survey of such areas, and the acquisition of title thereto, and, except in the case of a lease, no payment for such land shall be made by the United States until title thereto is satisfactory to the Attorney General.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make such expenditures for construction, equipment, maintenance, repairs, and improvements, including necessary investigations, and expenditures for personal services and office expenses at the seat of Government and elsewhere, and to employ such means as may be necessary to execute the functions imposed upon him by this set and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time act and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time. SEC. 6. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 to provide for the location, selection, and inauguration of this project, including surveying, optioning, and supervision of the lands involved, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such further sums as the Secretary of Agriculture may estimate and the Congress shall appropriate from time to time for the acquisition, establishment, operation, and maintenance of said refuge and to effectuate the provisions of this act; and any money appropriated hereunder for land acquisition and expenses incident thereto, including the initial appropriation hereunder, shall remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 188) authorizing the delegation of certain authority within the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have an explanation of the bill. Let it go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I note that I submitted the report on this joint resolution. It consists of one section, and the one section is only about three or four lines long, so, if I may, I will read the measure. It provides:

That the Secretary of Agriculture may designate in writing the Director of Finance of the Department of Agriculture or, in his absence, the officer acting in his stead—

And this is the purpose of the measure-to sign requisitions upon the Secretary of the Treasury for disbursing funds, and said requisitions shall be as valid as if they had been signed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That is the whole purpose of the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF BONUS TO PROVISIONAL AND PROBATIONARY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 457) to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit me to make a brief explanation?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill is to amend the World War Compensation Act so as to give the bonus to World War provisional and probationary officers. Technically these former officers have been considered part of the Regular armed forces but they resigned at the end of the war. They enlisted for the purpose of serving during the war, and in effect they were temporary emergency officers. This bill is merely to give them what the other emergency officers received. The cost would amount to less than $2,000,000.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, did the Senator from Utah object to the bill to which the Senator from Texas just referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). Objection was made.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to join the Senator from Texas in giving notice that I shall make a motion to call the bill up at the first opportunity.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1852) to promote the free flow of domestically produced fishery products in commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROMOTION OF BUSINESS AND ECONOMIC RESEARCH

The bill (S. 1740) to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining in connection with State university schools of business administration, research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GERRY. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to give a brief outline of the purpose of the bill?

Mr. GERRY. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill has not been heretofore explained. It is designed to encourage, develop, and conduct general and specific research dealing with the problems of our economic system and for the aid and assistance of small-business enterprises.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to establish business research stations at State and Territorial universities. Once established, such stations may be discontinued or transferred to another qualified institution after a hearing by the Secretary.

These stations are to be under the direction of the school of business administration, or, if no such school, the department of the university in which business subjects are taught, which will cooperate with the Department of Commerce in conducting research in business.

Little is being done along these cooperative lines for small business, and there is very great need for a law of this kind. The universities of the country have united in a study of the subject and have recommended action of the kind proposed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARKETING OF FARM COMMODITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2212) to provide for the development of marketing and marketing services for farm commodities, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That for the purpose of organizing, fostering, promoting, and developing marketing and marketing services for farm commodities, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for each fiscal year thereafter, the sum of $5,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $150,000 shall be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the administration of this act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. The sums made available under this act shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States to the department of agriculture (or, if the State department of agriculture is not engaged in marketing activities, or there is no State department of agriculture, to such other State agency as is engaged in marketing activities) under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe, for the purpose of organizing, fostering, promoting, and developing marketing and marketing services for farm commodities in such State, with a particular view to providing a marketing system which will furnish a steady flow of standardized farm commodities to centers of distribution and will provide for farmers adequate and readily available marketing services for commodities produced by them.

SEC. 2. Funds shall be apportioned under this act by the Secretary sec. 2. Funds shall be apportioned under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with an agreement between the Secretary of Agriculture, or his authorized representative, and the department of agriculture or other State agency in each State engaged in activities of the kind authorized by this act. With respect to the funds allocated under this act, such agreement shall constitute a part of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture and shall clearly set forth the procedure to be followed in the employment and dismissal of personnel by the State agency, the character of marketing services to be rendered, and the responsibility of each party to the agreement in order to develop marketing methods and marketing services in each State that will be of maximum benefit to producers and consumers of farm products. If more than one agency in a State is carrying on marketing and marketing services, the Secretary of Agriculture shall require that such agencies enter into a cooperative agreement to prevent duplication of work in connection with such activities.

Sec. 3. In allocating funds to the cooperating States under this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall take into account the total population, the population on farms, the income from agricultural production, and the character of and need for the services to be rendered under this act: Provided, That not less than $20,000 shall be made available for each cooperating State. That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture no additional allotment or expenditures therefrom shall be made under this act until a sum or sums at least equal to such additional allotments or expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by the State or agency or individual within the State.

tures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by the State or agency or individual within the State. SEC. 4. In the event there is no State department of agriculture, the funds that would be available for allotment to such State shall be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for allotment to another State or States for carrying out approved projects.

Sec. 5. That if any portion of the moneys received by the Department of Agriculture or other agency designated under this act shall by any action or contingency be diminished or lost or be misapplied, it shall be replaced by the State to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to such State.

or paid to such State.

SEC. 6. That the sums apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture to the States under this act shall be paid in equal semiannual payments on the 1st day of January and July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to the treasurer or other officer of the State authorized by the laws of the State to receive the same, and such funds shall be made available promptly, upon requisition, to the head of the cooperating agency responsible for their expenditure. The head of the cooperating agency in the State shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amounts so received during the previous fiscal year and of their disbursement on forms prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 7. Sums appropriated in pursuance of this act shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, appropriations for marketing and marketing services in the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will not the Senator from North Carolina make an explanation, because so much authority has been given to the Department of Agriculture, and we have appropriated this year over $1,400,000,000 for agriculture?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, what we have done in the measures to which the Senator refers has been to authorize the expenditure of vast sums of money. This bill does not carry an appropriation, but merely authorizes one with a view to aiding the several departments of agriculture in the respective States to bring about a system of marketing for the farmers in order to provide a regular flow of agricultural commodities. It is my judgment that if we could have such a system started, we would save a very great deal of money in the long run.

The main trouble in the country has been the distribution of goods. This bill has been pending for some time, it is supported by the Department, it is unanimously recommended by the committee. I hope there will be no objection. Anyone who wishes to object may object when the appropriation bill comes up next year. This is a mere authorization measure, not an appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Already there are more than 105,000 employees in the Department of Agriculture. The Department has large staffs in every county, and in most of the precincts. It would seem that with such an enormous army there would be an ample number of employees to make the investigation for which the bill calls.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to my very able friend, with whose views on economy I am in very hearty sympathy, as he knows, that those thousands of men are not devoted to the matter of developing the means of bringing local goods forward in the markets. They work on the top end, and it cannot be handled in that way. This measure has in view setting up marketing systems in the several States looking to the standardization of farm products, and providing for a steady flow of such commodities.

I think that if we should appropriate the money next year it would be saved a hundred times over, and it would be reflected in reduced appropriations by way of subsidies to the farmers. This bill is designed to provide markets, not to provide appropriations. I do not know anything in this country that is more needed than a system of marketing of farm products. I hope the Senator will let the bill pass.

amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. read the third time, and passed.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The bill (H. R. 5835) to authorize the President to render closer and more effective the relationship between the American republics, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I believe that I should make a statement with regard to this bill. On the last call of the calendar the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] objected to the consideration of the measure. Since that time I have been informed by that Senator that he will no longer object.

The bill deals solely with the State Department. The State Department desires to establish a division of cultural relations. The measure does not deal with the Agricultural Department, or any other Department except the State Department. It is largely for the purpose of enabling the Department to superintend the exchange of professors and students from colleges in South America and the United States. It also provides for an advisory commission, but the members of the advisory commission will draw no salaries and no mileage except when actually meeting in the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am requested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who is necessarily absent from the Senate, to object to the consideration of the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

PREVENTION OF MISREPRESENTATION OF SEEDS

The bill (H. R. 5625), an act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in seeds, to require labeling and to prevent mispresentation of seeds in interstate commerce, to require certain standards with respect to certain imported seeds, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GURNEY. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will not the Senator from South Dakota withhold his objection so that I may make a statement in regard to the bill?

Mr. GURNEY. I withhold the objection.

Mr. GILLETTE. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection to the consideration of this bill. The bill is of most extreme importance to all the farming sections of the country. It represents 2 years of collaboration in the preparation of this legislation by all the major farm organizations, by the Bureau of Plant Industry, and by the representatives of the seed dealers of the United States. Changes which have been made in the Soil Conservation Act will cause increased importation of seed for forage crops. The necessity for having seeds that will germinate, the necessity for having seeds that are not mixed with noxious weed seeds make it of paramount importance that the proposed legislation be passed at this session. I hope that the Senator will withhold his objection.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I have objection to the consideration of the bill at this time because I propose to offer certain amendments, which should be considered before the bill is passed. As I understand, the amendments cannot be offered at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, amendments to the bill can be offered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Dakota that amendments to the bill can be offered at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield to me, I join with the Senator from Iowa in urging the Senator from South Dakota to permit this bill to be considered and to let his amendments be considered at this time.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read and let us see what it is about.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that objection has been made, I wish to give notice that at the earliest possible moment I shall ask for consideration of the measure

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota has been informed that it is in order for him to present his amendments at this time if he wishes.

Mr. GURNEY. I shall be glad to do so in a few moments. I wish to make sure of the page and line at which the amendments should be placed.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from South Dakota desires to offer amendments to the bill but has temporarily mislaid them.

May I ask that the measure be laid over temporarily until the Senator is ready to offer the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GILLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendments to House bill 5625 were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, be reconsidered for the purpose of allowing the Senator from South Dakota to present certain amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the votes are reconsidered. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5625) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in seeds; to require labeling and to prevent misrepresentation of seeds in interstate commerce; to require certain standards with respect to certain imported seeds; and for other purposes.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill on page 16, line 8, to strike out the words "or vegetable."

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I have no objection to

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Gurney].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY. I also offer an amendment on page 16, line 9, after the word "keep", to strike out "such records as may be prescribed by rules and regulations prescribed under section 402 of this act," and to insert the words "for a period of 3 years a complete record of origins, germination, and purity of each lot of agricultural seed offered."

Mr. GILLETTE. I have no objection to that amendment, The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Gurney].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

OKIE MAY FEGLEY-CONFERENCE REPORT

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2110) to provide for purchase of fish (including shellfish) and products thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, was announced as next in order. Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SAFETY OF NAVIGATION

The bill (S. 2259) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill be passed over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

Mr. BAILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, did anyone object to Calendar No. 728, being Senate bill 2259?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I objected. There are some amendments to be tacked onto the bill which thus far I have not had opportunity to do.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sorry I did not hear what the Senator said. What was it?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am opposed to the bill until amended, as requested by the authorities of the Great Lakes.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator offer the amendments? Mr. VANDENBERG. Not at the present time. I think the bill is safer where it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

REQUISITIONING OF VESSELS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4983) to amend sections 712, 802, and 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, relative to the requisitioning of vessels.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. This bill was prepared by the Maritime Commission. It provides a more constructive and more reasonable system for requisitioning vessels under the United States flag in an emergency or in time of war. As the Senate knows, the present statute permits the requisitioning of vessels, but does not provide for proper appraisal or for proper valuation, or for any payments before final adjudication. The bill provides that the authorities acquiring the vessel on behalf of the United States may find the value, whereupon they may pay three-quarters of the value to the owner of the ship requisitioned, and the remainder of the sum in question may properly be adjudicated. It is to prevent the harshness of a sudden requisitioning of a vessel without compensation to the owner. It provides at any rate for 75-percent compensation to the extent of the valuation to be found by the Commission, and the valuation is not to be on any enhanced value due to the emergency, but on the value prior to the emergency. So there cannot be any loss, and, on the other hand, it is a merciful and just provision to provide for the owners of vessels. The bill is supported by the Commerce Committee, after careful consideration. I think it is a very good bill and a very timely one. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to old-age assistance was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1296) to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RANK AND TITLE OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2354) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army for commanders of corps areas and foreign departments, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under the national-defense plan, the Regular Army is divided into four armies. The War Department feels that the commanding officer of each of these four armies, only while serving as such, should have the rank of lieutenant general. The rank is temporary and lasts only so long as the general commands the army. If he retires while lieutenant general, he will retire in his original rank of major general. The total cost involved is only about $2,000, and the War Department feels it is necessary that the bill be passed in keeping with its plan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the fact that House bill 7093, being Calendar No. 849, is an identical bill, and has already passed the House. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7093) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army for commanders of corps areas and foreign departments, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2354 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2264) for the relief of Frank P. Hoyt was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill has been vetoed by the President once. I think it should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BANKS BUSINESS COLLEGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1881) for the relief of Banks Business College, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, Senate bill 1881 is a bill for the relief of the Banks Business College. House bill 777 is an identical bill. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the House bill be immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 777) for the relief of Banks Business College, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Banks Business College, a corporation organized in 1885 and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, and having its principal place of business at Philadelphia, Pa., is hereby authorized to bring suit against the United States of America in the Court of Claims for the purpose of recovering any alleged damages suffered by the said Banks Business College which the Court of Claims may find to be attributable to the United States Government, by reason of the said Banks Business College being evicted on January 1, 1918, from the premises which it occupied.

Sec. 2. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims

SEC. 2. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and determine such action upon its merits, with the view of rendering judgment, if any, in favor of the claimant for any such alleged damages described in section 1.

SEC. 3. This act shall not be interpreted as raising any presumption or conclusion of fact or law but shall be held solely to provide for trial upon facts as may be alleged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JAMES E. BARRY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2496) for the relief of James E. Barry, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army James E. Barry shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on October 16, 1919, as a private, Medical Department, United States Army: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other benefit, except the benefits of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended and supplemented, shall be held to accrue by reason of this act prior to its passage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. This soldier, James E. Barry, went overseas in August 1917, as I recall, as a member of the Coast Artillery, and while over there, in the performance of some work on the construction of a barracks or something of the kind, received an injury to his eye and lost his eye. His superiors wanted to send him home then.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. There is a very strong opposition to the bill by the War Department, but it seems to be that that is one case where perhaps the Department should have strained a little in favor of the claim. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senators withhold their objections so that I may make a brief statement?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the Senator doing that, but if the matter is to be argued I wish to argue it also.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bilbo] has an amendment which he desires to submit to this bill. Would it be agreeable to have the amendment considered now and acted upon, and then later, at the convenience of the Senate, the bill could be called up for consideration?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the Senator from Mississippi offering his amendment. I do not know what it is. But I do not want it considered until I know what it is.

Mr. BILBO. Does the Senator have objection to amending the bill at this time?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. Will the Senator say what the amendment is?

Mr. BILBO. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 16, after the semicolon, it is proposed to insert:

Staple Cotton Cooperative Association, Mississippi, $93,373.15.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. BILBO. I understand the Senator from Oklahoma has no objection.

I ask that my other amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$1,512,068.07" and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,605.441.22."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, just a brief word in explanation of this bill. Some years ago, when the cotton situation became acute, the Government initiated a loan program. The program was intended to help the price of cotton and to stabilize the price of cotton. A great number of State cooperatives went into this loan, and the headquarters were opened up at New Orleans, as I understand. At the time the loan was placed in operation cotton was selling for approximately 171/2 cents per pound. The loan was 16 cents per pound. A great number of States, as I understand, went into this program. Later on the price of cotton fell, and when the cotton was finally disposed of it was sold at about 131/2 cents a pound, which showed a loss to the cooperatives. A good many of these cooperatives had a reserve built up, so in the adjustment with the national headquarters of the cooperatives the State cooperatives lost all of their reserves and were forced to sign notes to make the record complete, to square up with the national association. This bill is only intended to adjust that business transaction. It is the opinion of those in the cotton-producing States, or very many of them at least, that it is only fair that the Government should adjust all losses between the State cooperatives and the national association.

In order that the record may be more complete I ask unanimous consent that a statement more in detail be placed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2585—REIMBURSING THE COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS FOR LOSSES OCCASIONED BY THE FEDERAL FARM BOARD'S STABILIZATION

The Federal Farm Board during the 1929-30 season made available to all farmers through the Cotton Cooperative Associations a able to all farmers through the Cotton Cooperative Associations a loan of 16 cents per pound on cotton. The cooperatives were required to give their notes to the Board for the amounts advanced. When the loan program was announced, the market level for spot cotton was about 17½ cents. When the loans were discontinued, prices had declined to around the 13½-cent level, or some $20 per bale. The value of the cotton in the loan at the then existing price was materially less than the loans authorized and made by the Federal Farm Board.

At the conclusion of the loan a settlement was agreed upon between the Farm Board and the cooperatives, providing for a stabilization corporation to take over the cotton at the loan price plus the carrying charges and the estimated overhead expenses.

stabilization corporation to take over the cotton at the loan price plus the carrying charges and the estimated overhead expenses. Following the agreement for settlement, the Attorney General ruled that since the Farm Board held the notes of the cooperatives for all advances made, it must require payment in full, otherwise a settlement could be made only upon the basis of insolvency.

The cooperatives had reserves accumulated over a period of years, of approximately $2,500,000, which, in the settlement made, were applied on the deficit. In addition, the cooperatives were required to give their notes to the Board for $1,700,000, making the total losses incurred $4,200,000, which is the amount provided for in this bill. Of the total amount involved, $2,749,700.18 is to offset obligations due to the Farm Credit Administration and $1,512,068.07 is authorized to be appropriated.

The Farm Board's 16-cent loan was just like the Commodity Credit Corporation's 8.30, 9, and 12-cent loans, except that the Farm Board used the cooperatives in making the loans. It was not the intention of the Farm Board to penalize the cooperatives in handling the loan, yet that is what resulted.

The purpose of this bill is to pay the actual losses experienced by the cooperatives, the difference between the carrying charges and operating cost and the amount paid in the settlement with the Federal Farm Board.

The action of your committee was based primarily on the information contained in properts submitted on the bill by the formation contained in properts submitted on the bill by the formation contained in properts submitted on the bill by the formation contained in properts submitted on the bill by the formation contained in properts submitted on the bill by the formation contained in properts submitted on the bill by the formation contained in properts submitted on the bill by the bill by the formation contained in properts.

The action of your committee was based primarily on the information contained in reports submitted on the bill by the Farm Credit Administration, which are given in full in the committee's report.

In arriving at its decision to recommend the prompt passage of the bill as amended and reported to the Senate, your committee, among other things, considered five factors:

1. Was the 16-cent loan initiated by the Federal Farm Board and was it for stabilization of the price of cotton?

The Farm Credit Administration in its reports submitted on the of the purposes of the program was stabilization of the price of cotton."

2. Did the cooperatives lose money, their own money, in the 16-cent loan operation?

The Farm Credit Administration states: "The settlement therefore rendered each association insolvent and still owing the Federal Farm Board large sums of money. Consequently it appears that the cooperative associations did sustain losses in connection with the operation."

3. Have the losses of the cooperative associations been properly verified?

The Farm Credit Administration states: "The associations have employed certified public accountants to review the record of each association for the purpose of estimating the carrying charges and operating expenses for which they believe they should be reimbursed. * * * Our check of the reports submitted by the accountants shows some errors in the development of averages, additions, and extensions. In the case of four associations these errors resulted in an underclaim of $14.651.76. With respect to six associations the errors caused an overclaim of $19.881.41. The result is a net overclaim against the United States in the amount of $5,229.65. * * * For such assistance as it may be to the committee we are enclosing a summary showing the result of our checks of the claim. The formulas used and the methods of computation seem to us to be fair."

4. Should the cooperative associations be reimbursed for their losses in carrying charges and overhead expenses incurred in the employed certified public accountants to review the record of each losses in carrying charges and overhead expenses incurred in the handling of the 16-cent loan?

arm Credit Administration states: "The record does not show that there is any legal responsibility on the part of the Government in regard to the claims in question. However, it is clear that the associations did sustain losses in connection with the 16-cent loan program and there is evidence to show that the Federal Farm Board would have considered a settlement which would have provided for some of the carrying charges and operating expenses had it been legally possible for the Board to do so."

5. Was a settlement agreed upon between the Federal Farm Board and the convertige expension of the carrying the settlement agreed upon between the Federal Farm of the 16-cent loan?

James C. Stone, Chairman of the Federal Farm Board, succeeding Alexander Legge, its first chairman, testified at the McKellar hearing in Memphis, Tenn., in part as follows: "The original thing we did, which we agreed to do, which we thought was the fair thing to do, and which was agreed to by Mr. Legge and myself and Mr. Stanley Reed and the balance of the Board, was the agreement which the Attenuer Coursel turned down. ment which the Attorney General turned down as not being legal. * * * I figure it was never fair to hold the members of the cooperatives responsible for an act which was done for the purpose of maintaining a price for all cotton."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a word in reply.

Mr. C. O. Moulton, head of the A. C. C. A., or the organization preceding the A. C. C. A., at that time recommended to the Farm Board the purchase of cotton, or the fixing of the price of cotton at 16 cents a pound. The Farm Board acted on that recommendation; and if my recollection is correct-if I am mistaken about it the Senator from Oklahoma will correct me—the loss to the Government was only $79,000,000. That was all. Seventy-nine million dollars was lost to the Government by the recommendation from the American Cotton Cooperative Association or its predecessors. Thereupon there was a compromise between the Government and the associations which are now asking for relief. The compromise was agreed to, and the Government took the loss which had been forced upon it by the various cotton associations. My recollection is-and I will ask the Senator if I am not correct—that all the corporations except one, the one with respect to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bilbo] has just submitted an amendment, have gone into bankruptcy since that time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the policy of the Government forced them into bankruptcy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Their own speculations forced them into bankruptcy. This proposal calls for a renewal of the associations. Ever since they have been in existence, whenever they become hard up and want some more money, they come back with claims. This very claim has been before the Congress for a number of years. It was first introduced by my distinguished friend from South Dakota. Of course, South Dakota raises a lot of cotton, and in that way, I suppose, the claim came before the Congress at that time. The claim has been before the Congress for years. There is nothing in it. It is a species of racketeering on the part of the American Cooperative Association; and this bill should not be passed. I hope the Senate will not pass it. When it is taken up it will certainly be debated before it is passed. I object to it coming up today.

Mr. KING. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill seeks to adjust the difference between the Government and some 10 or 12 States. The bill has been pending before the Congress for some time. If it goes over at this time I serve notice that at the earliest opportunity I shall try to obtain consideration and final action on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE COINS

The bill (H. R. 2750) to prohibit the issuance and coinage of certain commemorative coins, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PEPPER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

Mr. MALONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I am concerned with Calendar No. 803, House bill 2750, which was called while I was temporarily absent from the Chamber. May I ask what disposition was made of it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill went over on objection.

Mr. MALONEY. I ask unanimous consent to recur to House bill 2750.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2750) to prohibit the issuance and coinage of certain commemorative coins, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a bill introduced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Maloney] has already passed the Senate and is over in the House. This is not the same

Mr. MALONEY. No; this is an entirely different bill. May I explain it to the Senator?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes. I should like to hear the Senator's explanation.

Mr. MALONEY. The bill originated in the House of Representatives, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and as a result of expressions of opinion on the part of the President and the Treasury Department. The bill provides that the long-time practice of putting out new issues of coins be discontinued. At present, as a result of laws passed a long time ago, we are continuing to issue coins, or reissue commemorative coins, from year to year, with new dates, and coined at different mints. Many of them are returned to the Treasury. A tremendous expense is involved. There have been abuses by people engaged in the sale of coins, and I am very hopeful, because of these abuses, that the Senator will withdraw his objection to the bill. I am not the author of it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. If the bill should become law, would it hereafter prohibit the issuance of any commemorative coins whatever?

Mr. MALONEY. No; it has nothing whatever to do with that matter. The bill would merely discontinue the minting of new issues of coins heretofore minted and issued under acts of Congress passed sometime ago. The present condition actually acts to deter the aims of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the power of the Congress to declare war, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT STATUTES

The bill (S. 2688) to amend section 4884 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 40) was announced as next in

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let it go over.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will withhold my objection so that the Senator may make an explanation.

Mr. BONE. Senate bill 2688 is one of the bills recommended by the Commissioner of Patents to correct a condition which exists in the patent law of the country by which, unhappily, due to the mechanics of enforcement, patents are sometimes continued indefinitely, as long as a period of 44 years. The bill compels the applicant for a patent to expedite the obtaining of a patent after he announces his invention to the world. He would have 3 years to obtain his patent. The bill provides that the life of the patent may not extend beyond a 20-year period. It is one of the recommendations of the Commissioner of Patents. I believe five bills were introduced in the House, and are now on the calendar. I sincerely hope they will be passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the bill limits the life of a patent to 20 years.

Mr. BONE. From the time an applicant makes his application, the patent may not go beyond 20 years. Some patents have been dragged through the courts for as long as 44 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the proposed legislation is very wise.

Mr. BONE. It seems so to us. Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I will say to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] that the question came up before the so-called monopoly committee, and we received a great amount of testimony from experts and lawyers who were familiar with patent practice. The Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Coe, a man of very great ability, was the principal witness; and he made a number of recommendations which our committee favored, if I may be permitted to state the action of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are his recommendations included in

Mr. KING. His recommendations were incorporated in a number of bills which were introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] and reported by his committee. As to most of the bills, I am in favor of them. With respect to one of them, I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. BONE. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that on page 13 of the calendar, Calendar Nos. 916 to 920, are five of the bills which went through the committee on which the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] served, of which committee the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] was chairman. The bills were introduced in the House and passed unanimously by the House. There was not a single murmur of disapproval. I sincerely hope those bills will pass.

Mr. KING. Let us take them up seriatim.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] about the next bill on the calendar. Senate bill 2687, to establish a circuit court of appeals for patents.

Mr. BONE. There have been objections to that bill. It is a rather important bill. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Gerry] objected to it the other day.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BONE. Referring to Senate bill 2687, of course I should like to have it passed, but inasmuch as several Senators would like to discuss it, it had probably better go over. However, I should like to see Senate bill 2688, Calendar 809, passed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I still object to Calendar No. 809, Senate bill 2688.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio to state the grounds of his objection? I think if the matter were developed a little it would become perfectly clear, and perhaps there might not be any basis for objection.

Mr. TAFT. No; I think I understand the subject; and I object.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have no doubt the Senator understands the subject.

Mr. TAFT. The bill may be brought up later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT LAWS

The bill (S. 2689) to amend section 33 of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill by the Senator from Washington [Mr.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, this bill was reported from the Committee on Patents by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK]. It was my recollection that this particular bill was passed the other day. I had the impression that it was passed on the call of the calendar. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] had raised some question about the bill, and I believe its provisions were explained to his satisfaction.

There are now provisions in the law forbidding the importation into the country of pirated American works. The Treasury Department and the Post Office Department have found some difficulty in the enforcement of the law against the importation of pirated works. The bill would merely authorize the two Departments to set up recording systems by which they would be better able to give their employees, the collectors of customs, and the Post Office Department officials. an opportunity to know what the list of American authors is, and to exclude the pirated works.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are both Departments in favor of the

Mr. BONE. Both Departments are in favor of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. BONE. Their attorneys drew the bill, and I think there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 33 of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 33. That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General are hereby empowered and required to make and enforce individually or jointly such rules and regulations as shall prevent the importation into the United States of articles prohibited importation by this act, and may require, as conditions precedent to exclusion of any work in which copyright is claimed, the copyright proprietor or any person claiming actual or potential injury by reason of actual or contemplated importations of copies of such by reason of actual or contemplated importations of copies of such work to file with the Post Office Department or the Treasury Department a certificate of the Register of Copyrights that the provisions of section 12 of this act, as amended, have been fully complied with, and to give notice of such compliance to post-masters or to customs officers at the ports of entry in the United States in such form and accompanied by such exhibits as may be deemed necessary for the practical and efficient administration and enforcement of the provisions of sections 30 and 31 of this act."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. FLIGHT OFFICERS, AIR CORPS, REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 2225) to create a new group within the Air Corps, Regular Army, with the designations of junior flight officer, flight officer, and senior flight officer was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill involves no additional cost. It makes it possible for Reserve flight officers, who are now among the most experienced and capable flight officers we have, to continue in service under this special rank. They take the places of those who would come in to fill the required officer personnel without increasing the total established number. The Federal Government has spent millions of dollars in training these officers; and it is to the interest of the Government that they be retained.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a separate commission be authorized for the Regular Army Air Corps for the purpose of inducting on a commission status those Reserve officer pilots who are serving on extended active duty with the Army Air Corps or who are eligible for such duty with the Army Air Corps, warrant officer pilots and enlisted pilots on duty with the Regular Army Air Corps, who are not eligible for a commission as second lieutenant, Regular Army Air Corps, under existing regulations, who are graduates of the Army Air Corps Training Center, who have a minimum of 1,000 flying hours in military aircraft as pilot, such commission in the Regular Army Air Corps to be designated "flight officer," such commission to consist of three separate grades as follows: Junior flight officer, to consist of three separate grades as follows: Junior flight officer, flight officer, and senior flight officer. The rank pay, and allowances of a junior flight officer shall be equal of a second lieutenant, ances of a junior flight officer shall be equal of a second lieutenant, Air Corps, United States Army; the rank, pay, and allowances of a flight officer shall be equal of a first lieutenant, Air Corps, United States Army; and the rank, pay, and allowances of a senior flight officer shall be equal of a captain, Air Corps, United States Army. Junior flight officers will be promoted automatically to flight officers within and not to exceed 3 years' satisfactory active service performed after graduation from the Air Corps Training Center; flight officers to be promoted automatically to senior flight officers within and not to exceed 10 years' satisfactory active service after graduation from the Air Corps Training Center. Those officers who are commissioned in, or to be commissioned into the Air Corps, United States Army, as flight officers of the three grades indicated, shall be given constructive service for all duties served by them as Reserve officers, warrant officers, flying cadets, and indicated, shall be given constructive service for all duties served by them as Reserve officers, warrant officers, flying cadets, and enlisted pilots, serving as such in the Air Corps after graduation from the Air Corps Training Center: Provided, That this constructive service will count to the credit of such Reserve officers, warrant officers, flying cadets, or enlisted pilots when so commissioned for pay purposes, longevity, retirement, and rank, except this commission will not affect the promotion list of the permanent establishment as it now exists, but will be a separate promotion list; the uniforms and insignia of the flight officer grades will be the same as that of the second lieutement, first lieutement, and capitain the uniforms and insignia of the flight officer grades will be the same as that of the second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain, United States Army, Air Corps, or as the War Department may prescribe: Provided further, That the status of a flight officer shall be the same with respect to command, accountability, responsibility, and privileges in the same manner and to the same extent as that of officers of equal grade in the Regular Establishment: Provided further, That at the end of 17 years' service senior flight officers will receive the pay, privileges, allowances, and the emoluments equal to that of a major, Air Corps, United States Army, the grade, however, to be not increased. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF AMERICAN NATIONALS AGAINST SOVIET GOVERNMENT

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 315) to provide for the adjudication by a commissioner of claims of American nationals against the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is a House joint resolution which passed the House on July 5. The joint resolution is approved by the President and by the State Department. A large number of claims have been filed in the State Department by American nationals against the Soviet Union. The majority of these claims are the result of action taken by the Soviet Government after the revolution of 1917, at which time that Government nationalized property and repudiated the bonds and other obligations of prior Russian Governments. The United States Government also has a large claim against the Soviet Government as a result of this action, the claim resulting from the failure of predecessor Governments to meet notes given in exchange for cash advances and supplies furnished by this Government on credit. No agreement has been made with the Soviet Government for the settlement of these claims. However, in November 1933 the Soviet Government assigned to this Government certain assets, some of which have been liquidated and deposited in the Treasury, preparatory to the settlement of all such claims and counter claims.

An effort has been made by the Department of State to have claimants submit their claims against the Soviet Government; but so far only a small number have been filed. It is desirable that these claims be filed and passed upon at the earliest possible date. It is anticipated that the amount of funds required for determining the value and validity of these claims would be small in comparison with the total amount of the claims, and that it would require about 2 years to perform the work of adjudicating them. The bill provides for the appointment of a commissioner who would have a very small staff to assist him. The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations without opposition and without amendment.

Mr. KING. To whom are they to present their claims? Citizens of the United States have claims against the Soviet Government or its predecessors for a very large sum, running into the tens of millions of dollars. I understand that those claims, with proper authentication, have been presented to the State Department.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. KING. In the past the Soviet Government has not indicated a desire or willingness to pay the claims, notwithstanding the fact that there has been no attempt to deny their validity. I was wondering what benefit would be obtained. The bill would create jobs for a number of persons, some with salaries as high as $9,000 per annum. The State Department is now familiar with the claims, because they have been brought to the attention of the Department many times. If the plan were to have a committee selected by the Soviet Government and the United States for the purpose of ascertaining exactly the amount due, with a view to paying them. I think that would be a very proper thing; but it seems to me this is merely a work of supererogation. We know what the claims are. They have been presented to the State Department; and I do not see any advantage to be gained by having a further recapitulation.

Mr. HARRISON. The State Department thinks that the procedure recommended in the President's message should be followed. I do not know of any other way for American nationals to have an opportunity to present their claims against the Soviet Government. I cannot see any harm in the bill. It would afford the claimants a vehicle through which to present their claims.

Mr. KING. I think it is unnecessary. However, I shall not object. It is a waste of money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2289) for the relief of the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. I was promised some information in regard to it, which I have not as yet received.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE SLADE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2452) for the relief of George Slade, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$4,500", and insert "$500, and the additional sum of $50 per month in an amount not to exceed $4,000", so as to make the bill

G. Griffin, an officer of the United States engaged in the enforcement of prohibition: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS FISH PRODUCTS

The bill (H. R. 5681) to authorize the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase and distribute surplus products of the fishing industry was announced as next in

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in connection with the bill, which has already passed the House, I have an amendment which I should like to submit and explain. The purport and intendment of the bill are perfectly sound, but the bill does go too far.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the consideration of the bill has been objected to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like very much to explain the amendment, if I may, and have it pending.

Mr. McKELLAR. I inquire what is the number of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5681) to authorize the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase and distribute surplus products of the fishing industry.

To which Mr. Danaher offers the following amendment:

On page 1, line 3, to strike out "any part."
On page 1, line 7, after the word "amended", to insert "not to exceed $1,500,000."

On page 1, line 8, after the word "surplus", to insert the words "edible fresh, frozen, salted or dried but not canned."
On page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "shellfish" and insert in lieu thereof the words "mollusks and."

On page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "and similar forms of aquatic life and."

On page 1, line 10, to strike out the words "byproducts thereof"; On page 2, line 8, to insert section 2, subparagraph (a): "Sec. 2. (a) From the fund authorized to be transferred by "Sec. 2. (a) From the fund authorized to be transferred by section 1 hereof the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of Commerce sums as follows, to be maintained in a separate fund, $75,000, which shall be used by the Secretary of Commerce to promote the free flow of domestically produced dishery products in commerce by conducting a fishery educational service; and $100,000, which shall be used by the Secretary of Commerce to develop and increase markets for fishery products of domestic origin."

Mr. KING. From a reading of the bill it seems to me to be objectionable.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to explain to the Senate the general purpose of the bill and the purpose of the amendment. Of course, I must have the consent of the Senate to proceed. I inquire if the Senator from Utah has the bill before him?

Mr. KING. I have.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, may I point out-

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from New York. Mr. WAGNER. I want to inquire who is in charge of the bill? I hardly think it is proper to offer an amendment to the bill unless the Senator in charge of the bill is present.

Mr. DANAHER. I may say in answer to the Senator from New York that both Senators from Florida [Mr. Andrews and Mr. Pepperl are in the Chamber. They are both vitally interested in the bill and have discussed the bill with me, it seems, hours on end.

Mr. WAGNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not understand that.

Mr. DANAHER. Of course I think we all know what we are trying to do.

Mr. President, the reason why this bill is susceptible to amendment at this time is that I objected to it when it was previously called on the Calendar, but upon ascertaining what the intendment of the bill was, and after conference with the Chief of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce, as well as enlightening discussions with both Senators from Florida, I drew this proposed amendment. The idea back of it is that if this bill can be kept on the basis of aiding the consumers, it has immense merit and would have my wholehearted support. The moment this bill is allowed, however, to take another turn, and to reach into the field of assisting manufacturers and canners of fish and fish products, including that type of fish products which is not edible, then I think that this bill is susceptible to objection and should be rejected.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia. Mr. RUSSELL. I have examined casually the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut. If I understand the purport of the amendment, it will eliminate from the products that could be purchased such commodities as canned shrimp. Does the Senator from Connecticut intend to eliminate canned shrimp?

Mr. DANAHER. Very definitely. I submit to the Senator from Georgia that the amendment would include edible fish, frozen, salted or dried fish, and mollusks, which will include all kinds of oysters and clams; and crustacea, which will include shrimp, crawfish, and lobsters. There is no reason in the world why we should allow manufacturers to produce a manufactured surplus and then unload that surplus on the Surplus Commodities Corporation or anybody else at Government expense.

Mr. RUSSELL. The same argument might hold true against those who are engaged in the refrigeration of fish. Why should they be permitted to refrigerate large quantities of fish, and then have the Senator's amendment specifically empower the Federal Commodities Corporation to purchase such fresh fish but exclude canned fish? It is the practice to preserve fish for food by refrigeration and by canning, and the Senator's amendment would permit the purchase of refrigerated fish but would debar the purchase of the other kind of preserved fish, namely, canned fish.

Mr. DANAHER. Precisely; I realize that, and I know that somewhere we have got to draw the line. It is what we do every day. As Justice Holmes said, we draw the line between day and night, between youth and age. We have to draw the line somewhere, I will say to the Senator from Georgia.

When we undertake to include a manufacturer's surplus, then we might just as well reach out further and include the manufacturer of the tin cans who had expected to sell the tin cans but for whose product there was not a sufficient demand. We might just as well extend it to the miner who mines too much coal and therefore would like to unload his surplus on the Government. Not a bit of it. If we want to make this a consumer bill, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, if we want to help those who buy fish and hence enlarge the market for fresh, frozen, and salted fish, I am willing to go along; I want to see that type of bill succeed, but I am not willing to permit manufactured surpluses to be unloaded at the expense of the Government any more than I would be willing to see surpluses of any other kind of manufactured goods so unloaded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object to the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation does buy manufactured products of several kinds. They have bought several thousand cases of canned beans, beets, tomatoes, peas, and various other vegetables. I do not see why the Senator should seek by this amendment to discriminate.

Mr. KING. Objection has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made.

Mr. KING. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a minute? I hope the Senator will not include canned shrimp in his amendment. If there is anything that gives employment to vast numbers of men in my part of the State it is the canned-shrimp industry, and the price of no other commodity has gone down more than that of shrimp. The amendment would affect the men who go out and catch shrimp and take the shrimp into the factories. Certainly I know nothing would be of greater help to that industry than this particular bill without the amendment. I hope the Senator will not include canned shrimp in his amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Please let me point out to the Senator from Mississippi that this is not a relief bill; it is not a work bill; it is not intended to provide employment. This is a bill to take up surpluses. When the Senator from Georgia says that the Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases canned beans, remember that that is done under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Never mind whether or not what I think is a mistaken agricultural policy has forced the Government to buy canned agricultural products. That is not the point. This bill would put fish in that category. Certainly a person has a right to say whether he will or will not catch too many fish or too many shrimp, and if as a net result he catches a surplus and the manufacturer cans them and then cannot sell them, that is no justification whatever, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, for unloading that type of surplus on the Government. It seems to me that the amendment as submitted would cure the situation; it would confine it to a consumer bill. I want to make it a consumer bill. If that be done, then we can go ahead and educate the people to buy and eat fish and crustacea, whether canned, frozen, or otherwise, and thus have an opportunity to enlarge the market. I should think the Senator from Mississippi would jump at the chance to support this amendment, and hence enlarge the market for shrimp.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, objection has been made to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made. Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut could taste the canned shrimp made down in my State, he would be against the proposal he suggests.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have an order for the printing of my amendment. I should like to have the amendment printed, please.

Mr. KING. The amendment may be printed.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator is to have his amendment printed, may I suggest that his amendment say "not exceeding $1,500,000"? In my opinion, there should be added "in any one fiscal year"; otherwise the Senator's amendment would cause the bill to operate only for 1 year.

Mr. DANAHER. It may well be, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, that that is as long as it should operate. I do not know. I was trying to do something to help those who want to sell fish, but in that connection let us have the amendment printed, please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. KING. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar. ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF SETTLEMENT OF GALLIPOLIS, OHIO

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 272) to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of the city of Gallipolis, Ohio, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not find that joint resolution in my calendar. I ask that the clerk read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS AND SURVEYS FOR FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6634) amending previous flood-control acts and authorizing certain preliminary examinations and surveys for flood control, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, this bill was unanimously passed, I believe, or passed by a practically unanimous vote, in the House of Representatives. It does not contain any new flood-control projects, but simply carries a number of authorizations for preliminary surveys and provides a few corrections in the language of previous floodcontrol bills; also an adjustment in the matter of the Muskingum Valley in Ohio, on the basis on which contributions of the United States should be figured in order to put the Muskingum Valley project on the same footing as other projects heretofore authorized by law.

The committee further reported an amendment having to do with a project in New Mexico proposed by the Senator from that State [Mr. HATCH]. I have here a committee amendment which I intend to offer, if consideration is allowed the bill, making it clear that there is no intention by this measure to interfere with the present functions of the Federal Power Commission. I believe, with that amendment, every objection which has ever been made to this bill would be met. I hope we will be permitted to have the bill considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield. Mr. KING. I understood that a bill carrying a large appropriation for rivers and harbors would not be acted upon at this session of the Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This bill has nothing whatever to do with that bill. It is entirely a separate measure. This bill does not contain an authorization for any new projects. It merely provides for preliminary surveys in connection with a number of projects and also provides for some clarification of the law to correct defects which have developed in practice since the enactment of the preceding law.

Mr. KING. Does the committee that has charge of the river and harbor bill approve of this bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Commerce Committee have charge of both of them. That was considered by a different subcommittee.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, this bill is approved but it is not an appropriation bill; it is a survey bill, providing for preliminary surveys.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may the amendments be stated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 3, line 13, after the name "District", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay to said district forthwith on the passage of this act, the sum of $1,500,000, on verification of the fact that reimbursable expenditures in such amount have been made by the district, and on the agreement of the district, duly certified to the Secretary of War, that it will proceed immediately to convey and transfer any assets acquired through such expenditures not already conveyed, but such payment may be made prior to the actual transfer of title to lands, easements, rights-of-way, and other property."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to insert a new section, as follows:

a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. Section 2 of Public Law No. 761, Seventy-fifth Congress, is hereby amended by adding the following: "Provided further, That in all cases of the acquisition hereunder by the United States from the Los Angeles County Flood Control District or the Muskingum Watershed Conservancy District of lands, easements, or rights-of-way, wherein the written opinion of the Attorney General in favor of the validity of the title to such lands, easements, or rights-of-way is or may be required or authorized by law, the Attorney General may, in his discretion, base such opinion upon a certificate of title of the district from which said lands, easements, or rights-of-way are to be acquired accompanied by an agreement, duly executed by the district in conformity with the constitutions and laws of the State where the district in question is situated, to indemnify the United States against all claims, liabilities, loss, expenses, and attorneys' fees of whatsoever kind or nature, resulting from or arising out of any defect or defects whatsoever in the title to any such lands, easements, or rights-of-way so conveyed to the United States, including all just compensation, costs, veyed to the United States, including all just compensation, costs, and expenses which may be incurred in any condemnation proceeding deemed necessary and instituted by the United States in order to perfect title to any such lands, easements, or rights-of-way."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 13, to insert:

Mohawk River, N. Y.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 7. That the Alamogordo Dam and Reservoir on the Pecos River, N. Mex., is hereby authorized and declared to be for the purposes of controlling floods, regulating the flow of the Pecos River, providing for storage and for delivery of stored waters, for the reclamation of lands, and other beneficial uses, and said dam and reservoir shall be used, first, for irrigation; second, for flood control and river regulation; and, third, for other purposes. The Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War are directed to report to the Congress the amount of the total cost of said control. The Dam and Reservoir which is properly allocable to flood control. The Dam and Reservoir which is properly allocable to flood control. The appropriation and transfer of such amount from the general fund of the Treasury to the reclamation fund, for credit by reduction of the maximum obligation of the Carlsbad Irrigation District to repay the total cost thereof, is hereby authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment on behalf of the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 6 of the bill, on page 5, line 18, after the word "Congress", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the power and authority conferred by the Flood Control Act of June 28, 1938, and previously conferred upon the Federal Power Commission shall remain in full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 3a. Buffalo Bayou and its tributaries, Texas; the project set forth in House Document No. 456, Seventy-fifth Congress, and authorized by Public Law No. 685, Seventy-fifth Congress, is hereby modified in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of Public Law No. 761, Seventy-fifth Congress, and all requirements of local cooperation inconsistent with said section 2 are hereby eliminated.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this amendment has the effect of bringing the project to which it refers under the Flood Control Act of 1938, where all other flood-control projects now are.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that, on page 6, after line 7, the words "Green River, Mass." be inserted. I believe this matter has been taken up with the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the amendment has been submitted, and the committee has no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I submit an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill, on page 9, after line 3, after the committee amendment heretofore agreed to, the following:

SEC. 8. In the case of any local flood-protection work in the Ohio River Basin authorized to be prosecuted by the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1938, the President is authorized to waive the requirements of section 3 of the Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936, with respect to local cooperation to the extent of not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated cost of the lands, after investigation, that the city or town to be benefited by such work is, by reason of its financial condition, unable to comply with the requirements of such section 3 with respect to local cooperation. the requirements of such section 3 with respect to local cooperation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on page 7, after line 3, I move to amend by inserting the following:

Fairfax-Kaw City, Osage County, Okla.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, and I give notice that at the earliest possible moment I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. I think it ought not to be disposed of on one objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we return to the consideration of House bill 6634.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6634) amending previous floodcontrol acts and authorizing certain preliminary examinations and surveys for flood control, and for other purposes.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. Does this bill make provision similar to those which have been heretofore made, which would take out of the hands of any department of the Government which might have to do with flood control any authority they have over power-development matters? If so I desire to object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The only suggestion we have heard of that kind in connection with the bill was on the part of some employees of the Federal Power Commission who came to Congress undertaking to allege that there was something in the bill which would separate them from some of their authority. After consultation with the Senator from Kentucky I submitted an amendment, I suppose while the Senator from Washington was temporarily absent from the floor, which would protect the Federal Power Commission from any interference.

Mr. BONE. I remember a measure which came back from a conference containing a provision that would have made it impossible for anyone but the Army engineers to have anything to do with power development.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There was no such language in the pending bill originally, and in order to meet the fear of the Federal Power Commission, an amendment was inserted just a few moments ago which specifically protects them against any such thing.

Mr. BONE. I am really seeking information. I am glad to accept the Senator's statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRISON subsequently said: Mr. President, a few minutes ago we reached House bill 6634 on the calendar, a bill which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] had in charge, and the bill went over on objection made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Schwartz], but it was afterward passed. I had an amendment which was going to be accepted for a survey, and I merely ask, so that I may offer the amendment, that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and passed, is reconsidered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment at the end of line 5, page 7, after the committee amendment heretofore agreed to, to read as follows:

Hatchie River and tributaries, Mississippi and Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I had to step over to the other end of the Capitol for a few minutes. May I inquire what happened to calendar No. 881, House bill 6634?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was an amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment was offered by the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was it agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2626) to amend the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2041), providing for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway in the States of Virginia and North Carolina by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

USE OF NATIONAL PARKS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL PURPOSES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 29) to authorize the use of certain facilities of national parks and national monuments for elementary school purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the word "buildings", to strike out "and to permit the use, without charge, of Government-owned transportation facilities, when available", and to insert "when such space may be available for such purposes;" and on page 2, line 1, after the word "monuments", to strike out "for conveying such children to and from schools when not conveniently accessible by public transportation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate the providing of educational opportunities for children of Government employees and other residents in the national parks and national monuments the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to make available for elementary school purposes therein, without charge, space in Government-owned buildings, when such space may be available for such purposes without detriment to the official business of such national parks and national monu-

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS BY INTERIOR DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior of the United States, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, are authorized and empowered to administer for that purpose, are autorized and empowered to attain section or take from any person an oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition whenever necessary in the performance of their official duties. Any such oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition administered or taken by or before a special agent or such other employee of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, designated by the Secretary of the Interior, when certified under his hand, shall have like force and effect as if administered or taken before an officer having a seal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation from the chairman of the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, Senate bill 2627 authorizes special agents and employees of the Division of Investigations of the Department of the Interior to administer oaths. It seems that this power is vested in the investigating authorities of practically all the other departments, and the Interior Department states that they are frequently handicapped by not having the authority in their agents. They are making investigations frequently in remote places, where notaries public and courts are not available. Of course, as Senators know, it does not constitute a foundation for perjury indictments, but it does aid in making a complete record of investigations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS ANIMALS

The bill (S. 2625) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell or otherwise dispose of surplus animals inhabiting the national parks and national monuments, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, and under regulations to be prescribed by him, to sell, donate, or otherwise dispose of surplus elk, deer, bison, moose, bear, or the parts of any such animals, inhabiting any of the national parks or national monuments. Any other animals found dead within the aforesaid areas, or the parts of such animals, may be donated to scientific and educational institutions.

SEC. 3. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

RECREATIONAL FACILITIES IN CHOPAWAMSIC RECREATIONAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

The bill (S. 2493) to provide for the operation of the recreational facilities within the Chopawamsic recreational demonstration project, near Dumfries, Va., by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service, and for other purposes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the lands comprising the Chopawamsic recreational demonstration project transferred to the Secretary of the Interior by Executive Order No. 7496, dated November 14, 1936, shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service as part of the park system of the National Capital and its environs.

HUBERT RICHARDSON

The bill (S. 2299) for the relief of Hubert Richardson, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent on Western Navajo Indian Reservation Exchange selection 078942 filed on October 18, 1938, by Hubert Richardson in the district land office at Phoenix, Ariz., under the act of May 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 378), as amended by the act of February 21, 1931 (46 Stat. 1204), for lots 2, 3, and 4 of section 22, township 29 north, range 9 east, Glia and Salt River base and meridian, upon the submission of satisfactory proofs covering both the offered and the selected lands, as required by section 2 of the act of May 23, 1930, cited above, notwithstanding that the selected lands are within the boundaries of the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, and notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 14, 1934 (48 Stat. 960). The patent hereby authorized to be issued shall be subject to the provisions and conditions of section 24 of the Federal Power Act of June 10, 1920 (41 Stat. 1063), as amended.

ANTIETAM BATTLEFIELD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1780) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire property for the Antietam Battlefield site in the State of Maryland, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to acquire in behalf of the United States, through donations or by purchase at prices deemed by him reasonable or by condemnation in accordance with the act of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat. 357), lands, buildings, structures, and other property, or interests therein, which he may determine to be of historical interest in connection with the Antietam Battlefield site, the title to such property or interests to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That payment for such property or interests shall be made solely from donated funds. All such property and interests shall be a part of the Antietam Battlefield site and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland whether the acquisition of this property is desirable and what it would cost.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, the property referred to would cost the Government nothing. The Federal Government at this time owns nearly all the land where the battle of Antietam was fought, but there are four or five remaining tracts which can be acquired by the Federal Government without cost to it, provided the Government becomes empowered to take title to them. These tracts will either be donated or they will be bought with donated funds. At any rate there will be no cost whatever to the Federal Government. The Secretary of the Interior is in favor of the bill and no objections have been raised to its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE BONNEVILLE PROJECT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2375) to amend the Bonneville Project Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of this bill unless the amendment, on line 10, page 1, shall be disagreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, this bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary]. I have an amendment which I had intended to offer with reference to the engineering staff of the Bonneville project. So far as the question of the amount which might be received is concerned, I have no authority to speak for anyone.

Mr. KING. Unless the amendment to which I have referred shall go out, I shall object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill being read for amendment?

Mr. KING. It seems to me that if it is to go over, there is no necessity of taking up time to read the amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no particular interest in the bill, but on account of the necessary absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the distinguished leader of the minority, I feel like interposing in behalf of the bill. If there is no really valid objection to passing it, I hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. KING. I stated that I would object unless there was assent to the rejection of the amendment on line 10. They have increased the salaries of a large staff from $8,000 a year, which was ample, to $9,000. That amendment is not necessary. If the proponents of the bill will abide by the bill in its present form and agree that that amendment may be stricken out. I shall have no objection to consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] conferred with me before he left concerning this bill. I had hoped that it would pass as presented. It has the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget and of Secretary Ickes. But knowing the views of the Senator from Utah in regard to the matter, I am willing to accept the figure $8,000 instead of $9,000, if by so doing the bill may be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was. on page 1, line 8, to insert "without regard to the civil-service laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 10, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$8,000" and to insert "$9,000."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 2, after line 4, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 2 (a) of said act is hereby further amended by adding at the end of said section the following:

"The office of the administrator of the Bonneville project is hereby constituted an office in the Department of the Interior and shall be under the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of the Interior. All functions vested in the administrator of the Bonneville project under this act may be exercised by the Secretary of the Interior and, subject to his supervision and direction, by the administrator and other personnel of the project."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment to the bill, and I ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. Section 10 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"No engineering inspector, surveyor, field draftsman, field engineer, or other field engineering employee appointed under the provisions of this section shall, except in the case of an extraordinary emergency, be required or permitted to work more than 40 hours in any workweek."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the Senator from Oregon considered the amendment which provides that the office of the administrator of the Bonneville project shall be constituted an office in the Department of the Interior? being a project in Oregon, it seems to me the officer in charge should be there, and should be independent, so to speak, except under general law, of the Interior Department in Washington.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, the Secretary makes the argument that experience has demonstrated the necessity of a closer cooperation and understanding between the projects and the executive offices in Washington. My colleague the senior Senator from Oregon and I were following the Secretary's wishes in the matter.

Mr. KING. Of course, that is in harmony with the present tendency to concentrate all administrative authority in Washington. I should like to see a little decentralization, to have the engineers in charge function in the field rather than function in Washington.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Secretary makes the appointment. Would the Senator like to have me read his argument?

Mr. KING. No. I can imagine what the argument would I shall not object to consideration, but I deplore the tendency referred to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 (a) of chapter 720 of the acts of the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session (50 Stat. 731, 732), is hereby amended by inserting after the second sentence ending "in the vicinity of the Bonneville project," the following sentence: "The Secretary of the Interior shall also appoint, without regard to the civil-service laws, an Assistant Administrator, chief engineer, and general counsel and shall fix the compensation of each at not exceeding $8,000 per annum. The Assistant Administrator shall perform the duties and exercise the powers of the Administrator, in the event of the absence or sickness of the Administrator. trator, in the event of the absence or sickness of the Administrator until such absence or sickness shall cease, and, in the event of a vacancy in the office of Administrator until a successor is appointed."

Sec. 3. Section 10 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

PURCHASE OF COAL AND WOOD IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2751) to repeal sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes which relate to the purchase in the District of Columbia of coal and wood for public use, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the executive departments with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, to strike out "Public, No. 453, Seventy-fifth Congress," and insert "52 Stat. 139", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 109) are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Those parts of the acts making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments approved March 15, 1934 (48 Stat. 425), May 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 218), June 23, 1936 (49 Stat. 1827), May 14, 1937 (50 Stat. 137), and March 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 139), which provide "That the requirements of sections 3711 and 3713 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 109) relative to the weighing of coal and wood and the separate certificate as to the weight, measurement, or quantity of coal and wood purchased shall not apply to purchases by the Procurement Division at f. o. b. destination outside of the District of Columbia" (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 109a), are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, this is a House bill to repeal sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes which relate to the purchase of wood, coal, and other supplies for public use in the District of Columbia. The sections of the Revised Statutes referred to require a multitude of inspection of coal being purchased; so the Procurement Division was created under the act of 1918 by Executive order, which has been in effect since June 10, 1933.

They purchase coal on the net basis of 2,000 pounds. These old statutes provide the basis of 2,240 pounds. The bill seeks to amend that procedure. The old statutes have not been followed, as a matter of fact, for several years.

They are obsolete and should be repealed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, all the departments of the Government favor the passage of the bill. Many of them, including the Navy Department, have been put to a great deal of trouble by reason of the continuance in effect of the old statute providing that a ton of coal shall consist of 2,240 pounds, when it is bought in every other section of the country on the basis of 2,000 pounds to the ton. There is a provision that there shall be a payment of 20 cents a ton for inspection and measurement of the coal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY T. RAINEY DAM. ALTON, ILL.

(c) Such moneys as shall remain in the principal fund shall be transferred to and become a part of the capital reserve fund created by section 1 of the act of August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 872). The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2756) relating to the funeral costs and transportation of bodies of certain deceased veterans, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 6, after the word "travel", to insert "within the continental limits of the United States"; and in line 9, after the word "travel", to insert "within the continental limits of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph III of Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended by Veterans Regulation No. 9 (b), preceding subparagraph 2, be amended to read as follows:

"(III) Where death occurs in a Veterans' Administration facility, the Veterans' Administration will (a) assume the actual cost (not to exceed $100) of burial and funeral, and (b) transport the body to the place of burial within the continental limits of the United States."

SEC. 2. That paragraph III of Veterans Regulation No. 6 (a), as amended, be amended to read as follows:

"(III) To persons unable to defray the cost thereof, transportation and other necessary expenses incidental thereto will be supplied to cover travel, within the continental limits of the United States, to a Veterans' Administration facility for domiciliary or hospital care; to cover return travel, within the continental limits of the United States, to the place from which the person proceeded to the facility, when he is regularly discharged upon completion of such care; and to cover travel involved in a transfer, deemed necessary, from one Veterans' Administration facility to another. All such travel will be subject to grant of prior authorization therefor. In the event of death of any such person prior to his discharge from such care transportation expenses (including prans discharge from such care, transportation expenses (including preparation of the body) for the return of the body to the place of burial within the continental limits of the United States may be paid.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, prior to an explanation of that bill may I say to the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] that attention has been called by some members of the Subcommittee on Veterans' Affairs of the Committee on Finance to the fact that bills such as the pending bill should have been referred to that committee rather than to the Committee on Military Affairs. I cannot state whether this is such a bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have been dealing with bills of this kind for some years, both in the Committee on Naval Affairs and in the Committee on Military Affairs. The point has not been raised, and it would be just as well to continue as we have done during the remainder of the present session and discuss the proposed change in practice later.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have no objection to that procedure. I am afraid, however, that if two or three committees, such as the Veterans' Committee, the Naval Affairs Committee, and the Military Affairs Committee, as well as the Finance Committee, deal with legislation dealing with veterans the result will be to break down the precedents and to establish a variety of policies that will not only be harmful to the veterans but to the country as well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is a question which should be considered and solved, and which must be solved in the near

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, bearing on what the Senator from Massachusetts just said, I know of one case in which a bill had been introduced in at least three Congresses and referred to the Committee on Finance, and by the Committee on Finance referred to the Veterans' subcommittee, and adversely acted on by that subcommittee. I happen to know because I was the subcommittee to investigate the matter, and in each case it was reported favorably by me but rejected by the subcommittee on veterans of the Finance Committee. Later on, when the bill came up in the Military Affairs Committee, I raised no objection to it there. I voted for it, because I had previously voted for it. But that seems to be true in other cases, that a bill is introduced and rejected by one committee and then another committee acts on it favorably.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This all goes to show the need for the establishment of a Committee on Veterans' Affairs in the Senate. I have been urging such a step for several years, and during the last session of Congress the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] suggested such a committee.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with that.

Mr. CONNALLY. While I agree with my colleague with respect to veterans' affairs, there is a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance which performs all the functions to all intents and purposes which the Senator has in mind. These veterans' bills as to funerals ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, because the Committee on Military Affairs deals with them in the service, and we deal with with them out of the service. I am not going to object to this bill, but hereafter all bills which relate to funerals of veterans ought to go to the Committee on Finance, so as to have a uniform policy.

Mr. WALSH. I have reported such bills back and asked that they be sent to the Committee on Finance, the Subcommittee on Veterans' Affairs. I do not think there will be any need to do that in this case, but I do think in special private bills where it is sought to have a compensation granted, which has been refused or turned down by the Veterans' Administration, if one committee has one policy and another committee has another policy there is bound to be very bad conflict of precedents.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I agree with the Senator that the matter should be straightened out, and I shall be glad to join with him and others interested in straightening it out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask if this bill is approved by the Veterans' Administrator, General Hines.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is. It carried no increase in cost. It clears up a number of complications. At present the body of a deceased veteran may be shipped to any one of three different places without reaching place of interment. Under this bill it is shipped directly to place of burial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 6, after the word "travel", to insert "within the continental limits of the United States"; in line 9, after the word "travel", to insert "within the continental limits of the United States."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERADICATION AND CONTROL OF PINK BOLLWORM

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 85) authorizing the preparation of plans for the eradication and control of the pink bollworm affecting cotton in the United States and Mexico, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, House bill 4638 is similar to Senate Joint Resolution 85. It varies in only slight particulars. That bill is pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have consulted with the chairman of that committee and it is agreeable to him that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill. So I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from further consideration of House bill 4638, and that House bill 4638 be substituted for Senate Joint Resolution 85 and be now considered. If that shall be done I will then ask that Senate Joint Resolution 85 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4638) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare plans for the eradication and control of the pink bollworm and for other purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate joint resolution 85 will be indefinitely postponed.

APPOINTMENT OF HARLEY B. FERGUSON AS MAJOR GENERAL, UNITED STATES ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) authorizing the appointment of Harley B. Ferguson as a major general, United States Army.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I state to the Senator the consideration which moved the Senate Military Affairs Committee in recommending this action?

Mr. KING. I have read the report. There is a very strong recommendation against it by the War Department.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is the usual recommendation.

Mr. KING. I think it is very strong.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator permit me to state the reasons which prompted the committee in recommending the proposed action?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. During his tenure of office as president of the Mississippi River Commission, General Ferguson rendered distinguished service to the United States in controlling the floods of the Mississippi River. He developed, and over opposition and severe criticism executed, his plans for construction of cut-offs and straightening the long bends in the Mississippi River. The execution of his plans has resulted in shortening the distance between the mouths of the Arkansas River and the Red River by approximately 110 miles and has to a considerable extent solved the problem of flood control on the lower Mississippi River.

Your committee is of the opinion that General Ferguson is deserving of appropriate recognition for distinguished service to the United States as an engineer and believes that his appointment as a major general in the Army is fully war-rented by his service.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I wish to add a word with respect to the work performed by General Ferguson. He has saved the United States Government countless millions of dollars because of the work he has performed. He has made it possible for the Congress to abandon the Eudora floodway, thereby saving hundreds of thousands of dollars. He has done work in my section which is second to none so far as the development of our country and the actual saving of money are concerned. I think General Ferguson is richly entitled to the proposed honor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to add to what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Miller] has said, that I think the straightening out of the flood-control situation on the main stem of the Mississippi River, particularly in the lower region, is possibly as great an achievement as has been made by any engineer officer of the United States Army, or any other engineer in the history of the United States. I do not believe General Goethals' work in Panama, or any other engineering work in the history of this country was superior to the work performed by General Ferguson, or possibly even comparable to the work done under his supervision down there. The bill provides little enough recognition of the work he has done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, because of the splendid work which has been done by this officer, personally I should like to see some measure of compensation accorded him. However, the War Department makes a very strong adverse report. My hesitation in supporting the measure results entirely from the position of the War Department. I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I think there is very much to support the position of the War Department.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT STATUTES

The bill (H. R. 6872) to amend sections 4886, 4887, 4920, and 4929 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, secs. 31, 32, 69, and 73) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 6873) to amend sections 4904, 4909, 4911, and 4915 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, secs. 52, 57, 59a, and 63) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6874) to repeal section 4897 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 38), and amend sections 4885 and 4934 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, secs. 41 and 78) was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, an amendment will be suggested which will be clarifying in nature. I have not quite finished the preparation of the amendment. I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT STATUTES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6878) to amend section 4894 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 37), which had been reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the word "days" and the comma, to insert "or any extensions thereof," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4894 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 37) be amended by inserting after "six months", second occurrence, the words "or such shorter time, not less than 30 days, or any extensions thereof, as shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Patents in writing to the applicant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 6875) to amend section 4903 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 51) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, was Calendar No. 920, House bill 6875, passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was passed. Mr. BONE. Mr. President, was Calendar No. 918, House bill 6874, held up?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Danaher] suggested that he wished to offer an amendment to the bill. The bill was temporarily passed over.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE WITH RESPECT TO PATENT PROCEDURE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point the recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee with respect to the procedural bills which have just been passed. They cover four of the seven procedural recommendations made by the Temporary National Economic Committee. The bill which was temporarily passed over, as well as two bills earlier on the calendar, which also have been passed over for the time being, cover recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee will be printed in the RECORD.

The recommendations are as follows:

RECOMMENDATIONS

PATENTS

Except for certain items, the study has not been carried far enough to warrant specific and detailed legislative recommendations. The Committee does feel, however, that modification of the patent laws should be undertaken by Congress forthwith. It endorses the action of the Committees on Patents of the two Houses which have approved the proposals for modification of the mechanics of the patent system as submitted by the Department of Commerce were developed at hearings before the Committee, and are herewith formally recommended to the Congress.

In addition, the Department of Justice has submitted certain are herewith formally recommended to the Congress.

In addition, the Department of Justice has submitted certain recommendations for legislation based on its hearings, designed to draw a sound line between the legitimate use of patents and uneconomic extensions of the patent privilege which seriously invade the national policy against monopoly and restraints of trade. The recommendations of the Department of Justice relate primarily to the misuse of patents to effect restrictions upon price and production and upon freedom of opportunity for competitive enterprise. They, too, are approved by the Committee for immediate action by Congress. Summaries of the recommendations of both agencies are hereinafter set forth.

The Department of Commerce suggests:

The Department of Commerce suggests:

1. A single court of patent appeals, having jurisdiction coextensive with the United States and its Territories, should be created. Such a court would reduce the time and cost of litigation, and would end the conflict of decisions between the various appellate tribunals, before whom cases often are brought for the purpose of harassing both inventors and others who can-not afford to fight back, and corporations which must contest ridiculous claims.

2. The life of a patent should be limited to 20 years from the date of filing application, to obviate the possibility of a patentee's prolonging a patent monopoly by keeping his application in the Patent Office for a number of years. If a 20-year law is enacted, a patentee who diligently prosecutes his application and obtains his patent in 3 years would enjoy the full 17-year monopoly. If, however, he delays the prosecution, or attempts to keep his case in the Patent Office, he will be positively penalized by the ase in the Patent Office, he will be positively penalized by the shortening of the monopoly.

3. Not all the delays in the Patent Office are the fault of the applicant, and indeed some cannot be avoided. This is especially true when his application becomes involved in an interference proceeding instituted for the purpose of determining priority between him and another applicant. There is no question that the interference procedure has been greatly abused, and that in some instances it has been invoked for unworthy purposes, as, for example, to delay a competitor's application in the Patent for example to delay a competitor's application in the Patent for example, to delay a competitor's application in the Patent Office. It is evident that concurrently with the enactment of the 20-year proposal there must be a radical change in inter-ference procedure.

It is recommended that the interference procedure be terminated with a single decision of the examiner of interferences and that a patent be promptly granted on the basis of that decision. This would abolish all appeals to the Board of Appeals within the Patent Office in interference cases.

From an adverse decision of the examiner of interferences, appeals would be taken directly to a court which could, in a single proceeding, review the decision of the examiner of inter-

4. Renewal applications should be abolished. Under the present practice an applicant may prosecute his application to the point of allowance, fail to pay the final fee required by the law, and thereafter renew the application and resume prosecution. This procedure seems to be wholly unnecessary, and its abolition is recommended.

5. Under the present law an inventor may make public use of his invention for 2 years before filing his application. As a further step in accomplishing an earlier filing of the application looking to an earlier issuance of the patent, it is recommended that the public use period be reduced from 2 years to 1.

6. The present law allows an applicant 2 years within which to copy claims from an issued patent for the purpose of asserting the priority of his invention. As a parallel to the other steps which have been recommended to rid the patent procedure of this element of elapsed time, it is proposed that this period of 2 years also be reduced to 1.

7. Finally, it is recommended that the authority of the Commissioner of Patents be enlarged so that under proper circumstances he may require an applicant to respond to an office action within less than the normal statutory period of 6 months. This within less than the normal statutory period of 6 months. This grant of authority is necessary to the curtailment of the period of pendency of applications.

The Department of Justice suggests:

The record before the Temporary National Economic Committee abundantly demonstrates that patent practices now current, under the assumed protection of existing statutes and judicial decisions, greatly exceed the measure of privileges which rent, under the assumed protection of existing statutes and judicial decisions, greatly exceed the measure of privilege which might presumably be deemed necessary "to promote science and useful arts," and seriously invade the deep-rooted national policy against monopoly and restraints of trade, of which the antitrust laws are the most popular reflection. It seems clear that:

laws are the most popular reflection. It seems clear that:

1. It should be made unlawful for any person to sell or assign a patent, or to grant any right or license under a patent, on any condition which restricts the assignee or grantee in respect of the amount of any article which he may produce under the patent, the price at which he may sell any such article, the purpose for which or manner in which he may use the patent or any article produced thereunder, or the geographical area within which he may produce or sell such article. The foregoing prohibitions should be supplemented by a further prohibition against any other restriction embodied in a condition to any such assignment or license, which would tend substantially to lessen competition or to create a monopoly, unless such restriction is necessary to promote the progress of science and useful arts. These prohibitions, however, should not apply to any assignment of a patent or any grant of a license under a patent for use exclusively outside the United States and its Territories and possessions. and possessions.

In short, the owner of a patent would enjoy the full patent monopoly if he elected to retain the exclusive privilege of producing or selling under the patent himself. He would be free to assign the or selling under the patent himself. He would be free to assign the patent; to grant an exclusive license; and to grant licenses to anyone he pleased. But, if he grants a license, the license must be general and unrestricted, unless he is prepared to demonstrate that a particular restriction (other than restrictions in respect of price, production, use, or geographical area) is necessary to promote science and useful arts. Restrictions in respect of price, production, use, or geographical areas would be unconditionally outlawed.

2. It should be made unlawful for any person to whom a patent has been issued or who has in any other way acquired any patent or any interest in or right or license under a patent, to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of any article produced or sold under such patent or any such right or license on any restrictive condition of the kind described in paragraph 1.

3. It should be made mandatory for any sale, assignment, or other disposition of any patent or of any interest in or right or license under a patent to be evidenced by an instrument in writing. Similarly, any condition, agreement, or understanding relating to any sale or other disposition of any article produced or sold under a patent by a person to whom such patent has been issued or who sale or other disposition of any article produced or sold under a patent by a person to whom such patent has been issued or who has in any other way acquired such patent or any interest in or right or license thereunder, should be required to be evidenced by an instrument in writing. The seller or assignor in such case would be required to file a copy of such written instrument with the Federal Trade Commission within 30 days after execution. A register of these copies should be kept by the Federal Trade Commission, and both the register and the copies should be held available for inspection by the Attorney General, the Commissioner of Patents, or any officer designated by either.

4. No action based upon a charge of infringement of any patent, whether for damages, for an infunction, or for any other relief.

whether for damages, for an injunction, or for any other relief, should be permitted against any licensee under a patent or against any purchaser or lessee of any article unless either (a) the plaintiff has previously prosecuted to successful judgment an action against the grantor of the license or the seller or lessor of the article, as the case may be, for infringement arising out of or in connection with the granting of such license or the sale or lease of such article; or (b) jurisdiction over the grantor, seller, or lessor cannot be obtained in any court of the United States.

A provision to the foregoing effect would help meet one of the most serious abuses in the patent field: The use of litigation as a deliberate weapon of business aggression, rather than as an instrument for adjudicating honest disputes.

5. If any person who owns a patent or an interest in or exclusive right under a patent, violates any of the prohibitions described in paragraphs 1 and 2 above, he should forfeit his patent or his interest in or right under a patent to the United States, and such forfeiture should be recoverable in a civil action against such person by the United States. It should be provided that, upon a proper showing in such an action, a judgment should be entered requiring the defendant to assign his patent, or interest in, or right under a patent, to the United States, such assignment to be received by the Secreto the United States, such assignment to be received by the Secretary of the Treasury in the name of the United States. Thereafter, the patent or patent right would be offered for sale under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in the manner prescribed

A provision to the foregoing effect would adapt to the patent situation a familiar principle of law: That the abuse of a privilege granted by the State—e. g., public-utility franchises, licenses to sell securities, etc.—should result in forfeiture of that privilege. In this case, it seems wise to provide that the patent should be seized and resold, and so kept alive for useful exploitation, rather than to provide for its cancelation.

6. It should be made clear that the provisions described in paragraphs 1 to 5 shall be applicable to any extension, renewal, or modification of any existing license, contract of assignment, or contract of sale or other disposition, with the same force and effect as to any new license, sale, assignment, or other disposition.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think it may be important to remark at this time that, although the Temporary National Economic Committee has made recommendations having to do with other phases of the patent law, no bill covering those other recommendations has yet been presented, because it is the purpose of the Temporary National Economic Committee to make certain that full consideration shall be given to its recommendations before action is taken.

Mr. President, no member of the committee has any purpose of obtaining precipitate action on any recommendation. The procedural recommendations approved today have been suggested from time to time, but the importance of their enactment was made clear by the Department of Commerce during the hearings before the Temporary National Economic Committee.

House bill 6872, which reduces from 2 years to 1 the period during which an inventor may make public use of his inventions before filing application, was the fifth of the Temporary National Economic Committee recommendations.

House bill 6873, which provides for a substantial and necessary improvement in the so-called interference practice, was third on the list of our recommendations.

The fourth recommendation, which deals with the abolition of renewal applications, so-called, was embodied in House bill 6874.

The next bill, House bill 6878, is No. 7 on our list of recommendations, and authorizes the Commissioner of Patents, under proper circumstances, to require an applicant to respond to an Office action within less than the normal statutory period, which is 6 months.

House bill 6875 is No. 6 on the list of Temporary National Economic Committee recommendations, and reduces from 2 years to 1 the period within which an inventor may copy claims from an issued patent for the purpose of asserting his own priority.

Senate bill 2688, which has been temporarily passed over. and which I think will be considered again later, embodies the suggestions contained in the second recommendation of the Temporary National Economic Committee. It provides that the life of a patent shall be limited to 20 years from the date of filing the application. Under the present law, the life of a patent is 17 years from the date of issuance, so that by delays in the Patent Office, frequently procured by the applicant, the actual period of monopoly is often unduly extended. By this practice there have been cases of patents being, in effect, extended as long as 40 years.

The bill increases the statutory period of protection by 3 years; but by fixing the date of application as the date upon which protection begins the bill would have the effect of expediting action in the Patent Office.

The other patent recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee deal rather with the uses to which the patent privileges are put in the control of industry. As I have already stated, no bills have as yet been introduced by any congressional member of the committee dealing with these recommendations because of the desire of the committee that full consideration be given to the recommendations which have been made.

BESSIE BEAR ROBE

The bill (H. R. 1177) for the relief of Bessie Bear Robe was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER FOR WAPATO INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT, WASHINGTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1065) to authorize an appropriation for payment of the cost of providing additional water for the Wapato Indian irrigation project, Washington, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $1,731,500 to defray the actual cost of furnishing a water supply for the Yakima Indian Reservation provided for in the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. 604), and the agreement pursuant to said act between the Bureau of Reclamation and the Office of Indian Affairs approved by the Secretary of the Interior on September 3, 1936. Of the amount authorized to be appropriated, not to exceed $931,500 shall be available for immediate transfer to the reclamation fund and not to exceed $900,600 shall be made. the reclamation fund, and not to exceed $800,000 shall be made available in amounts not to exceed $20,000 annually for 40 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire whether or not more than $1,000,000 is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States; and if so, why are there not tribal funds or appropriations heretofore made to meet this obligation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, this bill is designed really to correct an estimate which was made in 1914. The 1914 act provided for certain reclamation work on the Wapato Indian Reservation portion of the Yakima Indian Reservation. At that time an estimate was made as to the cost, based upon other reclamation work taking water out of the Yakima River. Since 1914, through various acts of Congress, the Yakima River has been used for the purpose of supplying water to other projects. The result is that the provision which was made for the Indian reservation has been entirely insufficient.

The purpose of the bill is simply to give to the Indian reservation the allowance which was supposed to have been given in 1914, but of which the Indians have been deprived because of other diversions from the river. If the Senator from Utah will look at the report he will see that the bill meets with the approval of the Department of the Interior. The Secretary says:

There is urgent need for this legisltion and I recommend that the bill, amended as above, receive favorable consideration.

Objection is raised by the Bureau of the Budget; and if the Senator will look at the letter from the Bureau of the Budget he will see that it says:

No satisfactory explanation has been furnished this office concern-No satisfactory explanation has been furnished this office concerning the excess cost ($931,500) over the amount authorized to be and actually appropriated. Furthermore, there does not appear to be any good reason for appropriating $800,000 as a gratuity from the Federal Treasury to provide additional water for the lands involved.

The record itself shows that there is a full and complete, and, in my opinion, a satisfactory, explanation. I cannot understand why the Bureau of the Budget should have made the statement that there was no explanation. The reports of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and of the Reclamation Service very definitely show that the explanation of the failure of the 1914 plan to provide the reservation with the amount of water which was contemplated in the plan resulted from taking water from the same river for other purposes to be used for other reclamation projects. As I previously stated, the sole purpose of the bill is to provide for the Indians on the reservation the amount of water which they were supposed to obtain under the act of 1914.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think the explanation, lucid and important as it is, quite meets the situation. However, if the Senator will bargain with me-

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator that it is the best explanation I can give. I have simply stated the facts.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will bargain with me, I will let the bill pass and enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which it shall have passed, so as to give me an opportunity to confer with the Bureau of the Budget and with the Secretary of the Interior. If, upon receiving full information from them as to the validity of the claim I shall be satisfied, I shall withdraw the motion.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I would appreciate that action by the Senator.

Mr. KING. Otherwise we will dispose of it at a later time. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with respect to Calendar 922, Senate bill 1065, which has just passed, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WALTER J. HOGAN AND W. R. LARKIN

The bill (S. 2419) for the relief of Walter J. Hogan and W. R. Larkin, in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, Idaho, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 20, 1938 (52 Stat. 1363), entitled "An act for the relief of certain individuals in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, Idaho," is hereby amended by substituting the amounts of $400 and $2,000, respectively, in lieu of the amounts of $100 and $1,300 appearing in the act immediately following the names of Walter J. Hogan and W. R. Larkin.

LEASING OF CERTAIN LANDS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS IN OKLAHOMA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2617) to authorize the leasing of the undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to lease any of the unsold and undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, in accordance with the terms of the act of April 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 88), except as otherwise provided herein, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Leases made under this act may be for any term not to exceed 15 years. All acts or parts of acts authorizing the sale of said coal and asphalt deposits are hereby repealed.

Sec. 2. That the rate of royalty in coal leases made under this act shall not be less than 10 cents per ton on all coal mined, including what is commonly known as slack: Provided, That such leases shall require the mining of a minimum of 1,000 tons each year the first and second years after approval of the lease, 3,000 tons the third year, 5,000 tons the fourth year, and 15,000 tons the fifth and each succeeding year thereafter, or the payment of royalty thereon the same as if the coal had actually been mined: Provided further, That the lesses shall pay as advance royalty on each lease the sum of $100 each year for the first and second years, $300 for the third year, and $500 for the fourth and each year thereafter. The advance royalty paid for any year may be credited on the royalty becoming due on coal mined during the year for which said advance royalty has been paid, but shall not be credited on royalty on coal mined in any previous or subsequent year. The advance royalty paid for any year may be credited on the royalty becoming due on asphalt mined during the year for which said advance royalty had been paid but shall not be credited on royalty on asphalt mined in any previous or subsequent year.

SEC. 4. That the act of April 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 88), is hereby amended to provide that leases made thereunder may be for any term not to exceed 15 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oklahoma, who has given attention to the bill, whether or not there is sufficient provision to protect the Indians?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations still have a large amount of coal lands. The coal lands are under lease, and the leases are about to expire in some instances. It is the desire of the managers of the tribe, as well as of the Indian Office, that this bill be passed so that the lands may be kept under lease. The bill is recommended by the Department.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION OF CERTAIN LANDS TO UMATILLA INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4540) authorizing the restoration to tribal ownership of certain lands upon the Umatilla Indian Reservation, Oreg., and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, at the end of the bill to add an additional section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to restore to tribal ownership the undisposed of surplus lands of the Umatilla Indian Reservation, Oreg., heretofore opened to entry or other form of disposal under the public-land laws: Provided, That restoration shall be subject to any existing valid rights.

AMENDMENT OF GOVERNMENT LOSSES IN SHIPMENT ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6614) to amend the Government Losses in Shipment Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments with an amendment, in section 7, on page 6, line 21, after the word "Board" and the comma, to strike out "whether upon a bank or upon the Treasurer or other paying officer of the United States, but does not include money, coins, or currency of the United States nor instruments issued by any corporation or other entity owned or controlled by the United States, whether in whole or in part, against such corporation's or entity's own funds; as used in subsection (d) of this section it means such an instrument drawn by a duly authorized officer or employee of the Post Office Department," and insert "including instruments issued by any corporation or other entity owned or controlled by the United States, the funds of which are deposited and covered into the Treasury of the United States or deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, but does not include money, coins, or currency of the United States; as used in subsection (d) of this section it means such an instrument drawn by a duly authorized officer or employee of the Post Office Department", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. Section 9 (f) of the Government Losses in Shipment Act (50 Stat. 484; U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 31, sec. 528 (f)) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(f) The term 'original check' wherever used in this section means any check, warrant, or other order for the payment of money, payable upon demand and not bearing interest, drawn by a duly authorized officer or agent of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the District Unemployment Compensation Board, on their behalf against an account or funds of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the District Unemployment Compensation the District of Columbia, or the District Unemployment Compensation Board, including instruments issued by any corporation or other entity owned or controlled by the United States, the funds of which are deposited and covered into the Treasury of the United States or deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, but does not include money, coins, or currency of the United States, but does not include money, coins, or currency of the United States; as used in subsection (d) of this section it means such an instrument drawn by a duly authorized officer or employee of the Post Office Department."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, in 1937 the act known as the Government Losses in Shipment Act was passed, creating a revolving fund of half a million dollars to enable the Government to carry its own insurance in the shipment of valuables, including coin, money, securities, bonds, and so forth.

Formerly we appropriated each year the sum of $250,000 to pay insurance premiums covering such shipments. From August 15, 1937, to April 30, 1938, we have saved more than half a million dollars in premiums by carrying our own in-The losses during that period of time have been only $376.10, with a claim of $65.88 pending. Instead of paying $250,000 yearly for insurance premiums we have paid out less than $500 in losses. The purpose of the bill is simply to clarify the act, defining more clearly what valuables are meant, covering the checks and securities of the new corporations owned by the Government, and clarifying the intendment of the act. That is the sole purpose of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I notice that the bill refers to losses of the Post Office Department while acting as agent of the Treasury Department.

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the bill been submitted to the Treasury and Post Office Departments?

Mr. VAN NUYS. It has the approval of all departments.

made any recommendations.

Mr. VAN NUYS. No; but as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments I called all the departments, and they all verbally approved it. We have written approval from the Comptroller.

Mr. McKELLAR. The departments do not seem to have

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Are the provisions of the bill retroactive or merely prospective?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Prospective.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2420) relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY LAW

The bill (H. R. 6505) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, did some Senator ask that the bill go over?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, Mr. President; I asked that it go over. Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator withhold his objection while I make a brief explanation?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. The subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, the chairman of which at the time of the hearing was the able Senator from Utah, with a number of other Senators participating, conducted hearings and had a lengthy discussion of the merits of the bill before they made a favorable report on it.

The bill does three things. First, it extends for an additional 2 years' emergency period the existing municipal bankruptcy law, which otherwise would expire in the relatively near future.

Secondly, it authorizes counties and parishes to become eligible for the benefit of the legislation as did the original Municipal Bankruptcy Act.

In the third place, it provides that the physical acceptance of refunding bonds by creditors of an eligible political subdivision shall be taken as evidence of the agreement of those creditors to the plan of composition which provided for the issuance of the refunding bonds.

Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. Andrews] and I have jointly offered the measure in question. In Florida there are some forty-odd counties which are in a very precarious financial condition which can only be remedied by passage of the bill. It seems to me the bill would not be detrimental to anybody. It has received very careful consideration in the committee. It has the approval of constitutional lawyers of national reputation who deal with bond matters. I do not know what may be the basis of the Senator's objection, but I hope he will not insist upon the objection and will allow the passage of the bill at this time. I shall be glad to answer any questions about it. Has the Senator from Vermont any question to ask about the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have too many questions to be carefully considered in the time allowed on the call of the Senate Calendar. I stand on the objection.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to give notice that upon the completion of the call of the calendar, a motion will be made to take up and consider this bill.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I want to join in the statement that a motion will be made to take up the bill for consideration.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) to approve the action of the Secretary of the Interior in deferring the collection of certain irrigation charges against lands under the Blackfeet Indian irrigation project was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us have an explanation of the joint resolution. In the absence of explanation let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT STATUTES

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may we revert to Calendar No. 918, House bill 6874, which was reported from the Committee on Patents by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], who desired to offer an amendment. I believe he has further inspected the bill and is now satisfied with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6874) to repeal section 4897 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 38), and amend sections 4885 and 4934 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, secs. 41 and 78), which had been reported from the Committee on Patents, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the word "by", to strike out the words "striking out the word 'six' and substituting the word 'three' and by"; in line 9, after the word "That", to strike out "upon proof satisfactory to"; in line 10, after the word "Patents", to strike out "filed at any time after the application is allowed that the delay is or was justifiable the final fee may be" and insert "may in his discretion receive the final fee if"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "the", to strike out "3 months" and insert "6 months"; and on page 2, section 3, at the end of line 8, to insert the figures "$10", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4897 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 35, sec. 38) be repealed.

SEC. 2. That section 4885 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 35, sec. 41) be amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Provided, however, That the Commissioner of Patents may in his discretion receive the final fee if paid within 1 year after the 6 months' period for payment has passed and the patent shall issue."

SEC. 3. That section 4834 of the Period Statutes (U.S.C.)

SEC. 3. That section 4934 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 78) be amended by changing the last sentence to read: "On filling each petition for the revival of an abandoned application for a patent or for the delayed payment of the fee for issuing each patent, $10."

Sec. 4. This act shall take effect upon approval: Provided, however, That in all cases in which the notice of allowance had been sent prior to the time at which this act takes effect the final fee may be paid and other proceedings may be taken under the statutes in force at the time of approval of this act as if such statutes had not been amended or repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROVISION AS TO PATENTS

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may we now recur to Calendar No. 809, which is Senate bill 2688, to which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] objected? I am going to send to the desk an amendment to be inserted after the word "patent" and the semicolon in line 5, on page 2, which I understand makes the bill satisfactory to the Senater from Ohio, and that he is willing to withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2688) to amend section 4884 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 35, sec. 40).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 6, after the word "patent", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, however, That the Commissioner of Patents in his discretion may, before the patent issues, extend such 20-year period by adding thereto not to exceed 2 years to compensate for unavoidable delays during the pendency of the application not chargeable to the applicant; and in the case of any application which has become the property of the Government of the United States or any office or agency thereof, and which has been certified as important to the armament or defense of the United States as provided by Revised Statutes 4894 (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 37), such 20-year period shall be extended by adding thereto any period or periods of delay authorized by said Revised Statutes 4894", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4884 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 40) be amended to read as follows:

"Every patent shall contain a short title or description of the invention or discovery, correctly indicating its nature and design, and a grant to the patentee, his heirs or assigns, for the term of the patent, of the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention or discovery (including in the case of a plant patent the exclusive right to asexually reproduce the plant) throughout the United States and the Territories thereof, referring to the specification for the particulars thereof. The term of the patent shall begin with the issuance thereof and shall terminate at a date begin with the issuance thereof and shall terminate at a date not more than 20 years from the date of filing by the applicant in the United States of his earliest application disclosing the in the United States of his earliest application disclosing the invention covered by any of the claims of said patent: Provided, however, That the Commissioner of Patents in his discretion may, before the patent issues, extend such 20-year period by adding thereto not to exceed 2 years to compensate for unavoidable delays during the pendency of the application not chargeable to the applicant; and in the case of any application which has become the property of the Government of the United States or any office or agency thereof, and which has been certified as important to the armament or defense of the United States as provided by Revised Statutes 4894 (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 37), such 20-year period shall be extended by adding thereto any period or periods of delay authorized by said Revised Statutes 4894; but in no case shall the term of any patent be more than 17 years. A copy of the specifications and drawings shall be annexed to the patent and be a part thereof." part thereof.'

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon approval but shall apply only to all applications thereafter filed and all patents granted on such applications: Provided, however, That applications for patent actually filed prior to the time this act takes effect and all patents granted on such applications are to be governed by the statutes in force prior to the approval of this act as if such statutes had not been amended.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the amendment removes the reason for my objection, and I withdraw the objection which

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT AFFECTING TOBACCO

The bill (H. R. 6538) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there are four bills on the calendar proposing to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, all of them relating to tobacco. None of them are controversial, in that they are approved by the Department and have been worked out and agreed to by the representatives of the growers of tobacco, who met here early in January of this year. The first bill, House bill 6538, merely provides against the holding of a second referendum on burley and fire-cured tobacco. So far as I know there is no objection to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator's statement. These four bills provide amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 which have been worked out by the tobacco growers, in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture. There is no controversy over them, and they should be passed.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I say that it is essential that the bills be passed as early as possible, because they do affect this year's operations.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I join in the request that these four bills be passed as soon as possible.

DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The bill (H. R. 6724) to provide for the prompt deportation of aliens engaging in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill go over. Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I inquire if objection was made to the consideration of House bill 6724?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was interposed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator who interposed objection will withhold it for just a moment, I should like to make a brief explanation of the bill. It merely proposes to add to the class of aliens who are subject to deportation those who admit in writing that they have engaged in or been convicted of espionage or sabotage for a foreign government since their entry into the United States. It also adds to the class of deportable aliens those who have been guilty of violating the antinarcotic laws of any of the States.

I cannot conceive of any possible objection to the bill. It has passed the House unanimously, and the Senate Committee on Immigration has carefully considered it. The bill merely adds the two classes of aliens I have mentioned to those who are now deportable under the immigration laws, namely, those who have admitted in writing that they are guilty of espionage at the behest of a foreign power, and those who have violated the narcotic laws of any State.

Under our present immigration laws an alien who has violated a Federal narcotic statute is subject to deportation. This merely makes the same rule apply to those who have been guilty of violating a State narcotic law.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Department has recommended it, has it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. No objection was interposed by the Department.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in order that my reason for asking that the bill go over may be made known to the Senator from Georgia, let me observe that the provision, on line 9, page 1, affecting anyone who admits in writing that he was engaged in the specified acts, invites coercion and invites third-degree treatment; it invites a hysterical surrender.

There are so many possibilities under which one ill-advised can and does admit in writing his assumed or alleged guilt of a given offense, and I personally have seen so much of that kind of thing in my own experience in the practice of the law, that I would hesitate, and I would think that this body should hesitate, to submit to the country a law providing that anyone who admits in writing that he has performed a given act shall therefore be subject to deportation. There are many illustrations of people, for instance, having signed deeds, having signed leases, having signed notes. The books are full of instances of people claiming relief on the ground that they did not know what they were signing. I am certain that in time of war, for instance, this bill, if enacted, would lead to very real hardship. I would much rather that there be a trial and conviction and thereafter deportation than that anyone be deported as a matter of penalty merely because he admits in writing his alleged offense.

With reference to page 2, it points out that a person who at any time after entry has been convicted of violation of the particular specified act shall be subject to deportation. If a person were brought here at the age of 1, and at the age of 19 or 20 were convicted of violation of a State law, he might be deported to a foreign country, the penalty therefore being wholly inordinate, because he might not know the language of the people or the customs of the country, having grown up here. If we in this environment cannot do better than to submit him to a penalty of ultimate deportation for a violation of an offense which in and of itself might call for a 30-day jail sentence, it seems to me we are failing in our duty. The bill is fundamentally defective in going much too far. Because of that I object.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, of course the Senator has a right to object, but the argument he makes would be just as cogent against the present Federal law regarding the deportation of alien criminals.

Mr. DANAHER. Is not most of this matter already covered in the so-called Hobbs bill, which is on the calendar? Mr. RUSSELL. I am not familiar with the bill to which the Senator from Connecticut refers. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, I have understood.

Mr. DANAHER. That is true.
Mr. RUSSELL. But I do not think these identical provisions are in that bill.

Mr. DANAHER. I think that if the Senator will examine he will find that the matter to which I have referred is already pretty well covered, and there is a right of action by way of habeas corpus to the circuit court of appeals in a given instance, particularly for violations of laws involving moral turpitude and those involving narcotic violations and those involving the statute against anarchy, and similar offenses. I think that if the Senator will check he will find I am right. I think the calendar number of the Hobbs bill is 821, House bill 5643. I would therefore ask the Senator to check his bill against House bill 5643, and meanwhile let the matter be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

NATURALIZATION OF CLERGYMEN

The bill (H. R. 4100) to amend the naturalization laws in relation to an alien previously lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence and who is temporarily absent from the United States solely in his or her capacity as a regularly ordained clergyman or representative of a recognized religious denomination or religious organization existing in the United States, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REDEMPTION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE STAMPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2712) to amend section 2803 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "redeem", to insert the words "or make allowance for"; on line 8, after the word "under", to strike out "this act" and insert "section 203 of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934 or subsection (b) of this section"; and on page 2, after line 9, to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2803 (c), Internal Revenue Code, be amended to read as follows:

"(c) Unused or spoiled stamps: The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, may redeem or make allowance for any stamps issued under section 203 of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934 or subsection (b) of this section by exchanging them for other stamps of the same kind or by refunding moneys received therefor: Provided, That stamps may be exchanged or the value thereof refunded only in quantities of the value of $5 or more: And provided further, That no claim for the exchange of strip stamps or refund therefor shall be allowed unless presented within 1 year after the date on which such stamps were lawfully purchased, or if lawfully purchased prior to the date of the enactment of this act, within 1 year after such date. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this provision."

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the limitation contained in section 2803 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by this act, as to the time within which claims under such section must be pre-sented, claims under such section for the exchange of or refund for stamps lawfully purchased prior to the date of enactment of this act may be allowed if presented within 1 year from the date of enactment of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have an amendment to submit which will strike out certain language made unneces-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the comma in line 4 and the words "or if lawfully purchased prior to the date of the enactment of this act, within 1 year after such date."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF THE SALE OF LIQUOR

The bill (H. R. 6479) amending section 2857 of the Distilled Spirits Act was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act amending section 2857 of the Internal Revenue Code."

LEAKAGE AND EVAPORATION OF BRANDY

The bill (H. R. 6268) to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make certain allowances for losses by leakage and evaporation upon withdrawal of packages of brandy or fruit spirits under certain conditions was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR APPLYING FOR ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

The bill (H. R. 5450) to extend the time within which applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, may be filed was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to inquire what disposition was made of Order of Business 962, House bill 5450?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill went over on objection of the Senator from Utah [Mr. King].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Utah permit the Senator from Missouri to make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. KING. I have examined the report, and find there is an adverse recommendation from General Hines, and I thought we should have a chance to examine it before the next call of the calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection until an explanation may be made?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All the bill does is to extend for a period of 5 years the time within which a veteran may file an application for adjusted-service compensation. It is true the bill is reported adversely by the Veterans' Administration, as every other bill I can remember for the welfare and benefit of the veterans of the United States has been reported on adversely by the Veterans' Administration.

There are many men who have never filed applications for adjusted-service certificates. Some of them are men who are mental cases, and may never file applications. Others are men who, owing to their economic circumstances, did not need the bonus or adjusted-service compensation. Others are men who, by reason of lack of educational advantages or other causes, did not know of their right to file these applications.

It is entirely probable that a very small proportion of those who have not, over the period of years already passed, filed applications, will ever file them, but it seems to me that in a time of economic stress, to have a very arbitrary rule and cut these men off is not right. All the bill does is extend the time for a period of 5 years.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The present law expires on January 2, 1940?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Unless this bill shall be enacted-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unless this bill shall be enacted at this session of the Congress it will be impossible for the Congress to act without reestablishing the whole system, and reenacting the law.

Mr. WALSH. I have in mind at least one and perhaps two cases of very brave soldiers, men who performed very valuable services during the World War, who have felt that, because of their economic condition, they should not ever ask for the adjusted-service compensation. But a condition has arisen now when they are really in need.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6556) to provide for the seizure and forfeiture of vessels, vehicles, and aircraft used to transport narcotic drugs, firearms, and counterfeit coins, obligations, securities, and paraphernalia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend], I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6555) to amend the act of March 28, 1928 (45 Stat. 374), as amended, relating to the advance of funds in connection with the enforcement of acts relating to narcotic drugs, so as to permit such advances in connection with the enforcement of the Marihuana Tax Act of 1937, and to permit advances of funds in connection with the enforcement of the customs laws, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETURN OF RECORDS TO WILLIAMSBURG LODGE, NO. 6, F. A. A. M.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 183) authorizing the Librarian of Congress to return to Williamsburg Lodge, No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Virginia, the original manuscript of the record of the proceedings of said lodge was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF PERIOD OF AMORTIZATION OF HOME LOANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 628) to allow the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to extend the period of amortization of home loans from 15 to 25 years, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "fifth" and insert "sixth", on page 2, line 9, after the word "extension", to strike out "and/or" and to insert "or", and after the word "revision" to strike out "and no payment of any installment of principal shall be required during the period of 3 years from the date this act takes effect if the home owner shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the fourth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by striking out before the semicolon the words "fifteen years" and substituting therefor the words "twenty-five years".

amended by striking out before the semicolon the words "fifteen years" and substituting therefor the words "twenty-five years".

(b) That the sixth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is further amended to read as follows: "The Corporation may at any time grant an extension of time to any home owner for the payment of any installment of principal or interest owed by him to the Corporation or may at any time during the existence of the mortgage grant an extension and revision of its terms to provide for the amortization by means of monthly payment sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a period not to exceed twentyfive years from the date of its execution if in the judgment of the Corporation the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension or revision.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think we ought to have an explanation, or let the bill go over.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this is a very simple bill, and I am sure the Senator will have no objection to it. The bill is purely permissive. It authorizes the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to extend the amortization period on home owners' loans from 15 to 25 years, if the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension. There is an identical provision in the Federal Housing Administration Act, in which we give the owner of a home valued at $6,000 or less a period of 25 years in which to amortize the mortgage.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation favors the proposed legislation. It is purely permissive, but at least provides the opportunity for some who are in danger of having their homes foreclosed, an added period in which to amortize their debts. It does not reduce the debts by 1 cent, however. The monthly payments will be somewhat reduced, and the payments will be made easier. We have heretofore conferred this privilege upon home owners not in the distressed class, who have their mortgages insured under the F. H. A. They have 25 years in which to pay off their mortgages, plus interest.

This bill does not affect the 5-percent interest rate now being paid on these H. O. L. C. loans. I might point out, however, that only yesterday the F. H. A. reduced the interest rate from 5 to 41/2 percent for the home owner who is not distressed. Yet the home owner who had to refinance his mortgage because of his distressed condition must continue to pay 5 percent. The newly appointed Administrator of the Federal Lending Agency, Mr. Jesse Jones, has assured me of his deep interest in the problems of these distressed home owners, and of his intention to give sympathetic consideration to a possible reduction in the interest rate, a matter within his discretion under the law.

All we are asking now is that we accord the same privileges and benefits regarding amortization to the distressed home owner as other home owners now enjoy under the

F. H. A. I think this is both fair and humane.

I want to take this oportunity to pay deserving tribute to my colleague, Mr. MEAD, for his persistent and sympathetic efforts in behalf of these unfortunate home owners. He has been pressing this legislation from the moment he entered the Senate, and he is to be congratulated for having secured a favorable report from the Banking and Currency Committee, by unanimous vote. I cannot urge too strongly that the Senate adopt the pending bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but I understand that a great many of these home owners' mortgages are being foreclosed. The bill does not seem to make any provision for notifying those who are in distress that they might secure the advantages of such an act, if it were passed.

Mr. WAGNER. They are very much interested. As a matter of fact, they have formed an organization.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am told there are a very large number being foreclosed every day.

Mr. WAGNER. They were very reasonable in their request. They came before our committee and made a very favorable impression. They pleaded with us: "We are American citizens. We want to pay our debts. We do not want anything for nothing. We simply want fair treatment, and certainly we are entitled to a period of 25 years within which to amortize our debts, just as the more fortunate home owners are accorded under Federal law."

Mr. McKELLAR. I am in favor of the legislation if its provisions may be communicated to the people who need it.

Mr. MEAD. I am sure they will be notified.

Mr. WAGNER. My colleague the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Mead] will see that those who are entitled to the benefits are notified.

Mr. McKELLAR. He may be able to notify those in his State; I do not know whether his voice will reach all around the country or not.

Mr. MEAD. I will assume that responsibility. I might say a word in explanation of the bill.

I am interested in liberalization of the Home Owners' Loan Act not because I am in any way desirous of disparaging the excellent efforts which have been put forth by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or because I would wish to cast reflection upon that agency's splendid record in saving thousands of homes from foreclosure. However, for the past 2 or 3 years, I have been receiving a great many appeals from H. O. L. C. borrowers who cite their circumstances and who demonstrate the helpful possibilities which might result from a more lenient policy than was originally adopted.

A number of bills have been introduced in the House and in the Senate to provide for increased leniency in dealing with H. O. L. C. borrowers. These bills are aimed to assist the man who has shown his good faith and honorable intention to repay the Government, but who may have run into unexpected difficulties through sickness, unemployment, or other unforeseen situations which have temporarily crippled him financially.

This bill would not release any H. O. L. C. borrower from his rightful obligation to the Government, but would pave an easier road for him to follow in fulfilling that obligation.

I do not propose to recite the infinite good the H. O. L. C. has accomplished for the distressed American home owner. The agency was established when home foreclosures were being made on a wholesale scale. Through a reasonable refinancing means the H. O. L. C. averted those foreclosures in thousands of cases. The American home owner fully appreciated that aid and, with rare exception, he desires to repay his Government for it.

Many of us read the Home Loan Bank Board's statement at the close of 1938, which indicated the honesty and integrity of the average H. O. L. C. borrower. That statement said that H. O. L. C. borrowers are paying $1,000,000 every working day to charge off their debt to Uncle Sam. It stated that the H. O. L. C. borrowers now on the books of the Corporation have paid back 91 cents on every dollar of obligation to date. The statement went on to say:

It is only a few years since foreclosures in this country were tabulated at the rate of 1,000 a day. More than a million home owners were literally without hope. Today nearly three-fourths of that million are on their way to debt-free home ownership and thousands of others are making a good fight; the majority will win, barring unforeseen economic difficulties.

that million are on their way to debt-free home ownership and thousands of others are making a good fight; the majority will win, barring unforeseen economic difficulties.

H. O. L. C. borrowers to date have paid back $540,000,000, or 17 percent of their entire principal indebtedness. About 1,500 a month are paying off their loans in full; 44,000 already have paid in more than $100,000,000 to get their names crossed off our books. We are collecting about $15,000,000 a month in principal and $9,500,000 in interest.

These observations, indeed, appear to bear out the truth of the remarks of General Manager Charles A. Jones that "the American home owner is the world's best risk."

However, as in all situations, there is an unhappier side to this picture, and it is to those more unfortunate borrowers that we are addressing ourselves in urging some liberalization of the existing law.

As I am informed, 1,018,413 H. O. L. C. loans have been made throughout the entire United States. To date, the H. O. L. C. has authorized foreclosure on 168,010 cases—perhaps the number has slightly increased since I obtained that information. Of this number, approximately 16,265 cases are temporarily withdrawn. The total number definitely assured of foreclosure is approximately 151,745. Of this number, actual title has been taken to at least 122,555 properties.

In my own State of New York, 80,154 loans were originally made. Of this number, at least 25,158 foreclosures have been authorized by the H. O. L. C. One thousand one hundred and ten pending foreclosures have been temporarily withdrawn, so that actually 24,048 homes appear certain to be foreclosed on. As a matter of fact, over 17,750 homes have already been acquired. As a result, in New York State, over 30 percent of the total amount of loans seem certain to be foreclosed.

That is a large percentage of foreclosures and there must be some good reason for it. Assuming that, with very rare exception, the borrower wants to retain his home and wants desperately to find a way to repay his loan, it seems that some means should be provided for him to more easily meet his obligation.

As I understand it, something like 15 percent is the average percentage of H. O. L. C. foreclosures throughout the country. In New York State, the percentage is double that, and it is serious enough to merit our very careful attention and consideration.

The foreclosure policy of the H. O. L. C., particularly in the New York area, deserves study. In the first place, considerable legal expense is incurred in effecting foreclosures. Then, considerable additional expense is incurred in repairing the premises. After that, a substantial loss is sustained in the resale when, of course, a brokerage fee must be paid. After this procedure, a new owner steps in and gets a new mortgage for 15 years. In cases where the houses are not sold, which seems to be in the majority of instances, many times a foreclosed home is rented to a tenant at a less amount than the dispossessed owned was willing to pay.

When we consider that the F. H. A. program spreads the amortization payments over a period of 25 years and permits the purchaser to buy a home with a 10-percent down payment, it is readily understandable why the houses acquired by the H. O. L. C. will have to be sold at a substantial loss in order to compete with the newly constructed F. H. A. homes. It is my thought that if we were to spread the amortization period over a greater number of years that a large proportion of those who have already lost their homes and those who are about to lose their homes, might more easily be able to carry on. Most of these owners have a sentimental interest in their homes and, if given the chance, will struggle to meet their obligations.

There are other phases to the problem, such as wiping out deficiency judgments, reducing interest rates, and establishing a moratorium on principal payments for a period of time, all of which should be helpful but are not contained in this bill. However, to spread the amortization period over an additional 10 years would accomplish a real step in the right direction.

This bill, S. 628, will allow the H. O. L. C. to extend the period of amortization of home loans from 15 to 25 years. I have read the Corporation's report and note that, among other things, it is stated:

In our judgment, an unfortunate consequence of legislation of this character would be to single out that 3 percent of the country's families which already have Corporation loans; to confer on these borrowers, who as a group are able to pay their own way, the unneeded concession of a phenomenally liberal loan at less than actual cost, and to call on the citizens of the country as a whole to foot the heavy bill involved. Under the circumstances, the Board is firmly convinced that the weight of all pertinent considerations is in favor of continuing the Corporation's loans through to maturity on the basic plan originally provided, and that it must counsel against legislative proposals seeking to alter the Corporation's loan contracts.

As I stated before, I am fully and deeply conscious of the remarkable work that the Corporation has accomplished. I realize that its officials hold a justifiable pride in the record that has been made generally throughout the Nation. I compliment them on that record. Nevertheless, it does seem that in New York State, a foreclosure rate of 30 percent is much, much too high. That mars the record which is broadly so good. Cannot something be done to help these people in our State who are surely as dependable and sincere and conscientious as those people in any other State?

A principal objection to this proposal is that those who are now meeting their obligations would be affected, as well as those who cannot meet their obligations. In that event, they will all probably seek the benefit of this leniency. Granting that this might be the case, I do not understand that it would prove to be so offensive nor particularly burdensome. If such a measure would improve the economic status of all concerned, through a more lenient policy of repayment, it could only have a salutary effect on our whole economy. Some might be benefited more than others, but, in my judgment, the happy results would more than justify this slight generosity on the part of our Government.

H. O. L. C. borrowers in New York State, and especially in Greater New York, have unquestionably suffered in their efforts to satisfy H. O. L. C. requirements. Other agencies of the Government are more liberal and, with particular reference to F. H. A., such liberalization of regulation has proven beneficial.

Let it be understood that H. O. L. C. borrowers are not asking that they be released from any obligation, but they are asking that they be given a fair and reasonable opportunity to keep the home that the H. O. L. C. has once saved for them. I believe we should very carefully and considerately weigh all the factors involved in my State and endeavor to work out some more lenient methods to help them in their efforts to make good. They deserve that much consideration from a Government agency especially designed to assist them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMPLIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS OF TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 844) to simplify the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, and for other purposes, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the reimbursement to the Treasury from funds derived from assessments made pursuant to section 8 of the act of July 12, 1882, 22 Stat. 164, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 177), of all costs lawfully charged thereto for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the balance of such funds shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts; and thereafter the cost of transporting and redeeming such outstanding national bank notes and Federal Reserve bank notes as may be presented to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption shall be paid from the regular annual appropriations for the Treasury Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. The bill merely has to do with the book-keeping in the Treasury Department. A fund was created in the Treasury Department into which were paid by the national banks an assessment of 5 percent of their outstanding bank notes, that is, the bank notes in circulation. Those notes have all been redeemed and the national banks owe nothing to the Federal Government, so that the fund has no longer any need for continued extension. Assessments are made upon the banks for the transportation of these notes when redemption takes place, and it is provided that the money shall go into the general fund of the Treasury, and that whatever expenses are paid by the Government for transportation shall be paid by direct appropriation made by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE LOUIS ARTICK

The bill (S. 1510) for the relief of George Louis Artick was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws George Louis Artick, sometimes known as George Attick, of Danbury, Conn., shall be held and considered to have been legally admitted to the United States for permanent residence during July 1925.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to cancel any warrants of arrest or orders of deportation which may have been issued in the case of said George Louis Artick, sometimes known as George Attick, upon the ground of unlawful residence in the United States.

JOHN ULLMANN, JR.

The bill (S. 2427) authorizing the naturalization of John Ullmann, Jr., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, John Ullmann, Jr., of the United States Navy, retired, may be naturalized as a citizen of the United States by taking the naturalization oath of allegiance before any court having jurisdiction of the naturalization of allens.

NATHAN KAPLAN

The bill (S. 166) for the relief of Nathan Kaplan was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

REGISTRATION OF ALIENS

The bill (S. 2830) to provide for the registration of aliens was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Over.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection just for a moment? I should like to make a statement concerning the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. The bill provides for the registration of aliens. That is all it provides for. A number of bills concerning aliens have been presented to the Committee on Immigration during the present session of Congress. One bill on the calendar which has already been passed was much more drastic in its nature than the bill under consideration. With the idea of undertaking to accomplish something along the line of registration of foreigners or aliens, I introduced Senate bill 2830, which is Calendar No. 978, and which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and reported by that committee favorably to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. President, the reason I am interested in the passage of the bill at this time is because of the fact that as a part of the method of registration of aliens we propose to use the mechanics of the census takers for next year. The census, as Senators know, will be taken in 1940, and if some legislation along this line is not had at this session, action might have to be deferred for another period of 10 years. I think it is very important that we have some information about the number of foreigners or aliens in the country. That is the only purpose of the bill. Of course, objection has been heard. I simply want to serve notice now that at the first opportunity I shall ask that the Senate give consideration to the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I have objected to the present consideration of the bill because of the fact that it involves not only the use of the census but involves registration. It may be, if the Senator is willing to separate the bill into two parts and simply ask for consideration of that part which refers to the census, that it may be passed. As I stated to the committee, while I do object to the bill and will oppose it when it comes up, I do not intend to talk indefinitely against that part of the bill dealing with the census. Against the other part of the bill I should talk until the session is over.

Mr. STEWART. Would the Senator be willing that we consider the part of the bill to which the Senator has no objection at this time?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No. I do not think a bill of this importance should be taken up on the call of the calendar. I do not object to it being taken up in the regular way later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do this, Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who is temporarily necessarily absent from the Chamber. It has been agreed that the river and harbor bill shall go over until the next session of Congress. The river and harbor bill carried certain survey authorizations in addition to project authorizations. The bill before us contains nothing whatever except authorizations for pre-liminary surveys. I hope the bill may have consideration. I ask that House bill 7411, an identical bill, be laid before the Senate and substituted for the Senate bill.

ANNE BOICE

The bill (H. R. 1881) for the relief of Anne Boice was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice that the Veterans' Administration does not approve the bill. Let it go over.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I have been absent from the Chamber for about 15 minutes. I understand objection is made to Calendar 1004, House bill 1881.

Mr. KING. The Veterans' Administration does not recommend the bill. The amount involved seems to be small. In view of the adverse recommendation, I ask for an explanation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The amount involved is $361. This lady is the widow of a veteran who resigned and thereby lost his rights. Later he died, and his widow lost her rights to the adjusted-compensation certificate. Last year a bill was passed by the Senate and the House, after being approved by the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] is chairman. That bill restored the rights of the man as a veteran. After the bill was passed the War Department objected to it, and the President vetoed it.

The present bill is limited solely to the payment of a small amount to the widow. The theory of both the bills was that the man was prevailed upon by his superior officer to resign when he should not have resigned. He served during a sufficient period of time to have earned the portion of his adjusted-compensation certificate represented in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, General Hines is usually so merciful and just that any adverse report by him is almost a command to me. However, I shall disobey his command this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

BARNET WARREN

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2271) for the relief of Barnet Warren.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Schwartz, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Townsend conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRIBUTION OF JUDGMENT FUND OF KLAMATH AND MODOC TRIBES AND YAHOOSKIN BAND OF SNAKE INDIANS

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 901, Senate bill 1968. The House bill has now reached the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that it be taken from the table and be considered at this time. I am willing to accept the amendments of the House in order to obtain passage of the bill at this session. I ask that the House bill be

ADA FULLER

The bill (H. R. 2102) for the relief of Ada Fuller was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NINETY SIX OIL MILL, OF NINETY SIX, S. C.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3345) for the relief of the Ninety Six Oil Mill, of Ninety Six, S. C.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the bill represents the payment of the claim of the Ninety Six Oil Mill, of Ninety Six, S. C., which was one of a large number of mills making contracts for the sale of linters to the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only question involved is the statute of limitations, is it not?

Mr. BYRNES. The Court of Claims said that had the petition been filed within the time it would have found judgment for the claimant, but that it had not been filed in time. The court therefore certified the facts to Congress. There is a statement in the RECORD, furnished by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burke], as to the reason why the claim of this small corporation was not filed within the time provided by the statute. The claim had been placed in the hands of a lawyer in the city of Washington, who advised the claimant that its claim would be filed along with other claims. There was a test case. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and when the Supreme Court had decided the case it was found that in the case of this claim and one other the petitions had not been filed in time, and therefore the claims were barred by the statute.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that Judge Green, in delivering the opinion of the Court of Claims, states:

If the plaintiff's action had been begun in time this court would have rendered a judgment in his favor, but the remedy has been lost by reason of failure to file the petition within the period of limitations.

Under the circumstances it seems to me the claim is just. Mr. BYRNES. I think it is a just claim.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF BONNEVILLE PROJECT ACT

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 890, Senate bill 2375.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, yesterday a similar but not identical bill, House bill 7270, passed the House and has now reached the Senate. I move that the vote by which Senate bill 2375 was passed be reconsidered.

ARKANSAS STATE PENITENTIARY

The bill (S. 2804) for the relief of the Arkansas State Penitentiary, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that the bill is for the relief of the Arkansas State Penitentiary.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it for the relief of the prisoners? What relief does it propose? Will the Senator explain?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the Arkansas State Penitentiary is a self-sustaining institution. It provides its own funds from the operation of its own property. The obligation of $11,000 accrued in 1937. At the request of the Federal Government the penitentiary furnished 955 convicts to the Government to work on the levee, and thereby saved great expense to the Federal Government. The claim has been duly audited, and the amount represents merely the expenses paid out of the penitentiary fund.

Mr. McKELLAR. The convicts were used on a temporary flood emergency matter?

Mr. MILLER. They were used for weeks at the request of the Army engineers and the Secretary of War.

Mr. President, I ask that House bill 6641 be substituted for Senate bill 2804, and that it be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 77 OF BANKRUPTCY ACT AS TO PREFERRED CLAIMS

The bill (S. 2654) to amend subsection (n), section 77, of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, concerning payment of preferred claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, the bill proposes merely to amend the Bankruptcy Act in the case of equity receiverships so that employees who may be injured shall have a preference of their claims allowed in equity receivership proceedings as well as in reorganizations under section 77.

The Senate passed a bill in relation to that situation, but it probably will not get through on account of the situation in the House. This is an amendment of the Bankruptcy Act so as to put equity receiverships in exactly the same situation as reorganizations under section 77.

Mr. KING. Will this bill, if it should be passed, meet the sanction of the other House?

Mr. TRUMAN. I think so.

Mr. GERRY. I understand the Senate to say that this bill refers to section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act?

Mr. TRUMAN. It is an amendment of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, putting equity receiverships under the same provision.

. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 1, line 3, after the word "that", to strike out "the Bankruptcy Act" and insert "the first sentence of"; in line 4, after "(n)", to insert "of the Bankruptcy Act"; in line 8, after the word "any", to strike out "Federal"; in the same line, after the word "court", to insert "of the United States"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "action", to strike out the word "brought"; and in line 4, after the word "section", to insert "brought during the period of receivership or trust", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 77, subsection (n), of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"(n) In proceedings under this section, and in equity receiverships of railroad corporations now or hereafter pending in any court of the United States, claims for personal injuries to employees of a railroad corporation, claims of personal representatives of deceased employees of a railroad corporation, arising under State or Federal laws, and claims now or hereafter payable by sureties upon supersedeas, appeal, attachment, or garnishment bonds, executed by sureties without security, for and in any action against such railroad corporation or trustees appointed pursuant to this section, brought during the period of receivership or trust, shall be preferred and paid out of the assets of such railroad corporation as operating expenses of such railroad."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROCUREMENT OF AIRCRAFT FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2868) to facilitate the procurement of aircraft for the national defense which was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas please explain the bill briefly?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the bill authorizes the Secretary of War and also the Secretary of the Navy to make awards in cases where competitive bids have been received to not more than three bidders found by the Secretary to be the lowest responsible bidders that can satisfactorily perform the work or the service required to the best advantage of the Government.

The authority given in the bill is to run only until June 30, 1941.

The approved Army Air Corps expansion program contemplates the acquisition of approximately 2,600 military airplanes in addition to those already contracted for, and the completion of delivery thereof not later than June 30, 1941. It is materially in the interest of national defense that such program be completed within the time contemplated. If awards for aircraft, parts, and accessories must be made within the strict terms of existing law, danger exists that the greater part of the contemplated procurement for the Army Air Corps may fall into the hands of a limited number of companies unable to make timely delivery. The bill, if enacted, will act as an assurance of the completion of the program. It is not the desire of the War Department to abandon the competitive bidding system nor even to resort to the authority contained in the bill except under circumstances where the public interest clearly requires such action.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas briefly explain in what respect this bill proposes to amend existing law?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under the existing law, if one company makes the lowest bid, it gets the contract for all the airplanes that are offered for construction in connection with that particular proposal. This bill would permit the Department to divide the planes among the three lowest responsible bidders in order to complete the program if it deems such action advisable in the public interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. I inquire, is it not likely in time of war to cost an immense amount of money and will it not virtually allow three companies to monopolize the business?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No awards are to be made at prices in excess of those offered by the bidders in any competition, and all prices must be found to be reasonable.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me see if I understand it. company making the lowest bid for aircraft or aircraft parts will have to share that bid with two others if the Department thinks it is wise to do it. Is that the idea?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true. It is a spread of the

Mr. McKELLAR. Is that all the bill proposes to do? Mr. SHEPPARD. That is all.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me interject that this is a sort of antidote for monopoly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, have amendments been inserted in the bill so as to make it applicable to the Navy and so that the Navy may have the same advantage in the construction of naval aircraft?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is such a provision in the amended bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments on page 1, line 5, after the word "Department", to insert "or the Navy Department"; in line 7, after the word "War", to insert "or the Secretary of the Navy"; in line 10, before the word "Secretary" insert "said"; on page 2, at the beginning of line 2, before the word "Secretary", to insert "said"; in line 12, before the word "Secretary", to insert "said"; in line 15, after the word "Secretary", to insert "of the Department concerned"; in line 23, after the word "Secretary", to insert "of the department concerned"; on page 3, line 15, after the word "Secretary", to insert "of the Department concerned", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, until June 30, 1941, whenever contracts are to be awarded as a result of competitive bids for furnishing the are to be awarded as a result of competitive bids for furnishing the war Department or the Navy Department with aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to award a contract for the aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories to be purchased as a result of any such competition to the bidder that the said Secretary shall find to be the lowest responsible bidder that can satisfactorily perform the work or service required to the best advantage of the Covernment or in his discretion and when such action is con-Government, or, in his discretion and when such action is considered necessary by the said Secretary in the interest of the national defense, to award contracts for such aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories to such bidders, not exceeding three in number, as said Secretary shall find to be the lowest responsible bidders that can satisfactorily perform the work or the service required to the best advantage of the Government. The determinations as such multiple awards and the necessity for making the same shall be based upon quality, times and rate of delivery, price, and the prevention of the overloading of a plant or plants, and such division of awards shall be made only when found by the said Secretary to be in the interest of the national defense: Provided, That no awards shall be made at prices in excess of those offered by the bidders in any such competition and that the decision of the Secretary of the Department concerned as to the award of any such contract, or contracts, the interpretation of the provisions thereof, and the application and administration of the same shall not be reviewable, otherwise than as may be therein provided for, by any officer or tribunal of the United States except the President and the Federal courts: Provided further, That a report shall be made to the Congress by the Secretary of the Department concerned in the case of any competition as a result of which quantity contracts are entered into under authority of this act with more than one bidder, immediately upon the execution of such contracts, setting forth the articles purchased, the prices paid therefor, the name or names of each bidder, and of each contractor receiving a contract, and the particular reasons for awarding each of such contracts: Provided further, That any contract entered into under the authority hereby granted, for the construction of any com-plete aircraft or any portion thereof, shall be subject to the appli-cable profit-limitation provisions of the Act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as amended by the act of June 25, 1936 (49 Stat. 1926), and as further amended by the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.): Provided further, That procurement of aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor shall be made under authority of this act only when in the opinion of the Secretary of the Department concerned such action is necessary in the public interest. Provided further. That the authority herein greated shall the Department concerned such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided further, That the authority herein granted shall not be construed to abrogate, repeal, or suspend any of the provisions of Revised Statutes (3709, U. S. C. 41:5), the act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat. 905), the act of July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 787), section 14 of the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), or of the act of July 13, 1939 (Public, No. 168, 76th Cong.), or to the act of July 13, 1939 (Public, No. 168, 76th Cong.), or to prohibit the award of any contracts in any manner now authorized by law, but shall be construed as additional legislation to be utilized under the conditions herein set forth, during the effective period of this act: And provided further, That this act shall be applicable under the conditions herein set forth to awards of contracts upon which competitive bids have been heretofore requested or received but as a result of which contracts have not been

AMENDMENT TO FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1234) to amend section 13 (a) of the act approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1069) entitled "Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938," which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor, with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the word "follows", to strike out "or (11) operators employed in telephone exchanges having 1,000 subscribers or less" and insert "or (11) any switchboard operator employed in a public telephone exchange which has less than 500 stations", so as to make the bill read:

INVESTIGATION OF FEASIBILITY OF ZONE RAILROAD RATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) providing for an investigation of the feasibility and desirability of fixing railroad rates on the basis of zones, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments, on page 1, at the beginning of line 4, to strike out "and directed"; in the same line, after the "a", to strike out "thorough study and" and insert "preliminary"; in line 7, after the word "passengers", to strike out "and goods"; in line 10, after the word "passengers", to strike out "and goods"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "the", to strike out "carrying"; in line 3, after the word "of", to strike out "its study and" and insert "such"; in the same line, after the word "with", to strike out "such" and insert "many"; and at the end of the joint resolution to strike out "section 2", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to make a preliminary investigation with respect to the feasibility and desirability of fixing the charges made by railroads, subject to its jurisdiction, for the transportation of passengers, on the basis of zones, with a particular view toward the establishment of a simplified rate structure for the transportation of passengers within or between such zones and the establishment of rates low enough to encourage full utilization of the facilities of such railroads. The Commission shall report to the Congress of the United States the results of such investigation, together with any recommendations relating thereto as it deems appropriate, at the earliest practicable date, but not later than January 3, 1940. In carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution the Commission shall have the same powers as are conferred upon it for carrying out studies and investigation in the performance of other duties imposed upon and investigation in the performance of other duties imposed upon it by law.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee who reported the bill what the purpose of the amendment is in line 7 and line 10, where the words "and goods" are stricken therefrom?

Mr. WHEELER. Those amendments simply limit the proposed study to passenger fares.

Mr. MILLER. I notice that, and the point I wanted to make was that one of the major railroad questions in this country is the equalization of freight rates. I did not want the Commission to get the idea that the Congress would be content with letting them equalize passenger rates and pass over the question of freight rates.

Mr. WHEELER. I entirely agree with the Senator from Arkansas, but I felt that at this time this was all we could do. I intend at the next session of Congress, let me say to the Senator, to take that question up, a question in which he and others are vitally interested, and endeavor to have something done about it.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to the joint resolution in the form it now appears, but I did not want it to appear in anywise that, in the opinion of Senators or the Senate, a railroad problem of paramount importance could be settled by an adjustment of passenger rates.

Mr. WHEELER. I entirely agree with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

LITERATURE FOR GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

The bill (H. R. 7263) to permit the importation free of duty of certain literature for distribution at the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act entited "An act relating to the importation of distilled spirits for consumption at the New York World's Fair, 1939, and the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939, and to duties on certain articles to be exhibited at the New York World's Fair, 1939," approved April 29, 1939, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following the state of the College Cate Telescope 1999. and the following: "or at the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939

REFUND OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAX ON SPIRITS

The bill (H. R. 1648) to provide for the refund or credit of the internal-revenue tax paid on spirits lost or rendered unmarketable by reason of the floods of 1936 and 1937 where such spirits were in possession of the original taxpayer or rectifier for bottling or use in rectification, under Government supervision, as provided by law and regulations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not object to the bill. It merely permits a refund of taxes paid on spirits which were destroyed or rendered useless by the flood on the Ohio River in 1936 and 1937.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am familiar with the bill, but, as the Senator knows, the Treasury Department has interposed a vigorous objection. It is a House bill, and, therefore, only remains to have action taken by the Senate to become a law. I will ask that it go over for today, in order that I may have an opportunity to study the matter further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL FIREARMS ACT

The bill (S. 2785) to amend the Federal Firearms Act (Public, No. 785, 75th Cong.) so as to more adequately define the term "ammunition" as said term is defined in said act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not find in my book here any report on that bill.

Mr. STEWART. I have a report on it.

Mr. WHITE. Is the report from the Commerce Commit-

Mr. TAFT. The report of the House committee was before the Commerce Committee of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator explain just what the effect of the bill would be?

Mr. STEWART. Yes. The purpose of the bill, Mr. President, is to amend the act of February 1938, which was an act defining ammunition for the purpose of keeping a check, as I understand, on gangsters, by excluding from the definition of the word "ammunition" as used in that act shotgun shells and .22-caliber rifle cartridges. It has the approval of the Attorney General and of the Treasury Department. Is that satisfactory?

I understand that the House bill on the same subject has come over the Senate. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 2883) to amend the Federal Firearms Act (Public, No. 785, 75th Cong.) so as to more adequately define the term "ammunition" as said term is defined in said act was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1, subsection 8, of the Federal Firearms Act (Public, No. 785, 75th Cong.) be amended so as to read as follows, to wit:

"(8) The term 'ammunition' shall include only pistol or revolver ammunition. It shall not include shotgun shells, metallic ammunition suitable for use only in rifles, or any 22 caliber rimfire ammunition."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2785 is indefinitely postponed.

RELIEF OF PURCHASERS OF LOTS IN FLORIDA

The bill (S. 538) for the relief of certain purchasers of lots in Harding town site, Florida, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent to any person who, as a result of an auction sale of lots in Harding town site, Florida, conducted during February 1924 by a representative site, Florida, conducted during February 1924 by a representative of the Department of the Interior, agreed to purchase a lot in such town site and who (1) prior to the date of approval of this act, has paid to the United States 75 percent or more of the agreed purchase price of such lot, or (2) within twelve months after the date of approval of this act makes payment to the United States which, together with payment previously made, amounts to 75 percent of the agreed purchase price of such lot.

SEC. 2. As used in this act, the term "person" includes an individual, partnership, corporation, or association.

MICHAEL M. COHEN

The bill (S. 2143) for the relief of Michael M. Cohen was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that House bill 5775 be substituted for the Senate bill, and considered at this time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of Michael M. Cohen

The bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of Michael M. Cohen was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Michael M. Cohen, of Boston, Mass., the sum of $1,000, representing the amount of a United States bond posted by him as security for an immigration bond executed by him in April 1937, and conditioned upon the appearance before immigration authorities of Salvatore Marino, such immigration bond having been forfeited as a result of the nonappearance of sald Salvatore Marino, who was subsequently apprehended and deported: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1.000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of House bill 5775?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2143 will be indefinitely postponed.

CONSERVATION PROJECTS IN THE GREAT PLAINS AREA

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 902, Senate bill 1802, authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States.

This bill was called up a short time ago and objected to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. King]. He has asked me to give an explanation of the bill. I understand he has no objection to my explaining the bill at the present time.

This bill does not call for any appropriation from the Treasury. It would authorize the President and the Secretary of the Interior to use W. P. A. workers on reclamation projects. Instead of using them, for instance, in building some project which would not be of any moment to the country at all, where there is a reclamation project in some of the arid sections and it cannot be paid for in 40 years, the cost can be cut down by using W. P. A. workers or C. C. C. workers on the project. The bill provides for something really constructive, and it is a procedure which has been tried out and used effectively in Montana in connection with other projects. The bill merely authorizes that this practice be followed in connection with the projects referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to undertake the construction, including acquisition of water rights, rights-of-way, and other interests in land, of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States.

of the United States.

SEC. 2. Any moneys expended on such construction from appropriations made under the authority of this act shall be repaid to the United States by the water users in not to exceed 40 annual installments. Any labor or materials supplied for such construction by the Work Projects Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, or any other Federal agency shall be utilized in such manner as the President may determine, and for such labor and materials the water users shall reimburse the United States in such amounts and on such terms as the President may fix for each project.

Sec. 3. No moneys may be expended on a project pursuant to the authority of this act unless and until (1) the Secretary of the Interior has found, and has certified to the President, that the project has engineering feasibility and that the moneys to be expended on the project from appropriations made under the authority of this act probably can be repaid by the water users within 40 years; and (2) the President has approved said findings and has determined that labor and materials for the construction of the project should be made available to the Department of the Interior by the Work Projects Administration or a similar Federal agency, in the amount found by the Secretary of the Interior to make up the difference, if any, between the estimated cost of construction and the amount which can be expended from appropriations made under this act and probably can be repaid by the water users: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may accept for the construction of the project such labor or materials as may be offered by any State or political subdivision thereof, State agency, or municipal corporation, and may reduce by the amount thereof the estimated cost of construction to be met by the expenditure of Federal moneys.

the expenditure of Federal moneys.

SEC. 4. In undertaking any project pursuant to the authority of this act the Secretary of the Interior, by cooperative agreements with the Department of Agriculture or other Federal agencies or State agencies, may arrange for such cooperation of governmental agencies in the construction or operation and maintenance of the project as he deems desirable.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including investigations and surveys of projects proposed under the authority of this act, any sums appropriated to be subject to transfer by the Secretary of the Interior, in such amounts as he deems necessary to executive departments or other Federal agencies pursuant to cooperative agreements entered into under section 4 of this act; and, from such sums appropriated or transferred, expenditures may be made for personal services in the District of Columbia and may be made for the same purposes and under the same conditions as included in the appropriation acts for the departments, establishments, and other agencies to which sums may be made available by appropriation or transfer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INA JONES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2561) for the relief of Ina Jones, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$2,500" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,000," and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Ina Jones, in full settlement for injuries suffered by her in an automobile accident, responsibility for which was placed on the driver of a Government truck, which accident occurred on June 16, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BELL GROCERY CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2529) for the relief of Bell Grocery Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 1, to strike out "That there is hereby appropriated", and to insert "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $427.50 to the Bell Grocery Co., of Pineville, Ky., to pay 28 months' rent on a warehouse which was used by the Works Progress Administration, and which sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States by the Bell Grocery Co. growing out of such transaction: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANLEY FALK AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2531) for the relief of Stanley Falk, Howard Franklin, Mrs. Nathan Falk, and Rose Winter, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "$500" and to insert "$250", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Stanley Falk, of Little Rock, Ark., the sum of $120.09; to Howard Franklin, of Little Rock, Ark., the sum of $150; to Mrs. Nathan Falk, of Little Rock, Ark., the sum of $200; and to Rose Winter, of Little Rock, Ark., the sum of $250, in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States for property damage and personal injuries sustained when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a car driven by Charles L. Willis, an employee of the Public Works Administration, at Wooster, Ark., on July 2, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARRIE HOWARD STEEDMAN AND EUGENIA HOWARD EDMUNDS

The bill (S. 1962) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to reopen and readjudicate the case of Carrie Howard Steedman and Eugenia Howard Edmunds was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims be, and it is hereby, vested with jurisdiction and directed to reopen and readjudicate the case of Carrie Howard Steedman and Eugenia Howard Edmunds against the United States, No. E-563, decided February 28, 1927, and reported in volume 63, Court of Claims Reports, at page 226, upon the evidence heretofore submitted to the said court in the said cause, giving due weight in such readjudication to any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered since February 28, 1927, construing the relevant provisions of the applicable statutes, particularly the identical terms of section 402 of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, and if such Court of Claims in such readjudication shall find upon said evidence that, under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1921, the plaintiffs are entitled to a judgment under the relevant statutes, as now construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, particularly the terms of section 402 of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, then the court shall enter its judgment in favor of the said Carrie Howard Steedman and Eugenia Howard Edmunds in said cause for such sums as said evidence will justify, not to exceed the amount claimed in the original petition in the Court of Claims, with interest as provided by law.

THERMAL SYNDICATE, LTD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1638) for the relief of Thermal Syndicate, Ltd., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,093.29 to Thermal Syndicate, Ltd., as equitable reimbursement and in full and final settlement and satisfaction of the damages and losses incurred and suffered by it, and for which it has not yet been reimbursed, in moving its equipment from the space in the Bush Terminal Buildings to its new location, and in otherwise complying with United States Navy commandeer order No. N-3255, dated June 18, 1918: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan a question with regard to this bill, but I do not see him in the Chamber. Is the Senator from New York familiar with it?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this is one of a series of bills, the object of the bill being to reimburse a tenant in the Bush Terminal who was ordered out by the Navy Department because of the desire for space during the war.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the bill calls for the reimbursement of the expense of removal.

Mr. MEAD. It is to compensate the claimant for the expense of removal.

Mr. KING. It did not present its claim within the time the Government fixed for the presentation of claims to a board set up during the war?

Mr. MEAD. It is my understanding that the claimant went to the Court of Claims, and that court held that the company actually expended the amount of money asked for, but it has never been reimbursed, and there is need of legislation in order for them to collect this amount of money.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, we have taken similar action by way of private bills for several other corporations who were tenants in the same building, the Bush Terminal Warehouse, in Brooklyn. I assure the Senator that it is a perfectly legitimate claim.

Mr. KING. The only point I had in mind about it was that a large number of persons made claims against the Government for damages arising during the war, some of which claims were valid and some not, and the Government set up boards for the adjudication of all those claims. A great many persons, as well as corporations, did apply, and awards were made and were paid. Some failed to apply to the Board, and now, many years afterward, are trying to get special legislation to relieve them.

Mr. BROWN. The claimant here has been diligent in the prosecution of its claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EBERHART STEEL PRODUCTS CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1790) for the relief of Eberhart Steel Products Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Claims", it is proposed to insert "notwithstanding the lapse of time, or any statute of limitations"; on line 6 to strike out "upon the basis of just compensation"; on line 16, page 2, after the word "judgment", to strike out "upon the basis of just compensation" and insert "notwithstanding the lapse of time, or any statute of limitations"; and on page 3, line 1, after the words "Provided, That", to strike out the word "suit" and insert the word "suits", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time, or any statute of limitations, with instructions to hear and determine to judgment the claims of the Eberhart Steel Products Co., Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., against the United States growing out of 43 certain contracts dated on and between January 28, 1920, and September 24, 1920, for the manufacture and delivery by said company to the War Department of certain material and parts for class B military trucks, notwithstanding any failure or error of any Government official to give proper written orders for changes made in any of said contracts, or fix the value thereof, or any previous decisions or decrees rendered with reference thereto, or any alleged settlement or adjustment heretofore made, or termination agreement, except only for proper credits to be given for any and all payments heretofore made: Provided, That no judgment rendered on this claim shall exceed the amount heretofore found by the Court of Claims as the fair cost of manufacture of supplies left on claimant's hands, manufactured in accordance with the terms of the foregoing original contracts and changes thereunder.

Sec. 2 Jurisdiction is further hereby conferred upon the United

SEC. 2. Jurisdiction is further hereby conferred upon the United States Court of Claims with instructions to hear and determine to judgment notwithstanding the lapse of time, or any statute of limitations, the claims of said company against the United States for losses and damages suffered on dies, tools, plant, material, and equipment procured for making class B military-truck parts pursuant to agreement of officers of the War Department to give additional orders to said company for these parts, notwithstanding any lack of authority of said officers or that said agreement was not properly executed or in the form required by law: Provided, That suits shall be commenced within 4 months after this act becomes effective.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF FLOOD SUFFERERS IN MISSOURI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1693) to confer jurisdiction on the District Court of the United States for the western district of Missouri to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of certain claimants who suffered loss by flood at or near Bean Lake in Platte County, and Sugar Lake in Buchanan County in the State of Missouri, during the month of March 1934, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "that", to insert "notwithstanding the lapse of time or any provisions of law to the contrary", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the lapse of time or any provisions of law to the contrary, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the following-named people or their heirs, representatives, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns: G. M. McCrary, Paul N. Shouse, Emma Shults, Mrs. C. E. Johnson, Mrs. A. H. Wilber, G. E. Hutson, Elmer Willis, Ethel McDuff, W. J. Huter, W. C. Hood, J. P. Kuhnert, Florence O. Saunders, E. Cobb, James D. Kelly, W. H. Myers, Dora Weldin, Frank Dougherty, M. H. Whitnah, Charles C. Myers, H. A. Whitnah, W. F. Reese, George Willis, N. D. Gasaway, Paul Johnson, Harry Turpin, John H. Chapin, J. D. Fraizer, C. W. Pierson, L. K. Poos, Lula A. Jegglin, Mrs. E. T. Graham, A. F. Russell, E. O. Keene, H. F. Chapin, Goldie Noland, Mrs. Goldie Noland, B. F. Kabel, Oscar Swearinger, Argyle Reese, S. O. Daniels, Belle Wagner, and W. D. Shreve. Said claims arise out of a flood allegedly resulting from the defective or improper placing and construction of dikes or revetments in the Missouri River by the War Department of the United States at or near Bean Lake, in Platte County, and Sugar Lake, in Buchanan County, in the State of Missouri, in the month of March 1934. Suit hereunder may be instituted at any time within 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act, and proceedings therein, appeals therefrom, and payment of judgment thereon, if any, shall be had in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of the Judicial Code.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I have several amendments I desire to offer on behalf of the committee, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "judgment", to insert "without interest, but with costs, under and in accordance with the same provisions of law as if the United States were a private party".

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 2, after line 23, to insert the following:

SEC. 2. The United States district attorney for the western district of Missouri is hereby charged with the duty of defending the United States in any suit instituted under the authority of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 23, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, to insert the following:

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to pay judgments under this act. Such amounts shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury when the judgment of the district court has become final and on presentation to the Secretary of a duly authenticated copy of the judgment. Such payment shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of claims arising out of such flood damage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this claim. Is there any liability upon the part of the Government?

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, that is what we are trying to find out. We are giving these people permission to sue in the Court of Claims to find out what the liability is. In this case the engineers put an obstruction in the Missouri River, which caused the ice to form a jam in the center of the river, and adjacent territory was flooded which had never been flooded before. Then the engineers took the obstruction out of the river, and there has not been a flood since, but the people who were damaged have never had a chance to file a claim for recovery, and all the bill does is to give them a chance to do so.

Mr. KING. This does not establish any liability on the part of the Government?

Mr. TRUMAN. No.

Mr. KING. Or fix the amount to be paid?

Mr. TRUMAN. No.

Mr. KING. It is just for the right to file a claim?

Mr. TRUMAN. It gives them a chance to go into the district court.

Mr. KING. Upon further investigation I may possibly desire to file a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

The bill was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the lapse of time or any provisions of law to the contrary jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the with the same provisions of law as if the United States were a private party upon the claims of the following-named people or their heirs, representatives, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns: G. M. McCrary, Paul N. Shouse, Emma Shults, Mrs.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to pay judgments under this act. Such amounts shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury when the judgment of the district court has become final and on presentation to the Secretary of a duly authenticated copy of the judgment. Such payment shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of claims arising out of such flood damage.

JOANNES JOSEPHUS CITRON

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1954) for the relief of Joannes Josephus Citron, which were, in line 5, to strike out the word "lawfully" and in line

7, after the name "Idaho", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the said Joannes Josephus Citron shall not be eligible to become a citizen of the United States."

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 4, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes" (30 Stat. 369), is hereby amended so that the last paragraph of the appropriation for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery (30 Stat. 380), which provides as follows: "The President is hereby authorized to appropriation for the surgery (30 Stat. 380), which provides as follows: "The President is hereby authorized to appropriate the surgery (30 Stat. 380), which provides as follows: point for temporary service 25 acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the relative rank and compensation of assistant surgeons," shall read as follows: "The President is hereby authorized to appoint for temporary service 100 acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the rank and compensation of assistant surgeons."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of this.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the number of surgeons who are yearly required to take care of the health of the officers and enlisted men of the Navy is 75. Under the present law, before being appointed they must be graduates of a medical school and have had 1 year's interneship in a hospital. They are given permanent appointments under the present

It has been found that mistakes have been made from time to time in giving permanent appointments before these men are tried out in the naval service. The purpose of the pending bill is to do away with permanent appointments until after they are tried for 18 months. The number is fixed at a hundred so that there may be an elimination of 25, and still the usual number be named. There is no increase in the number, and the probationary period will cover the interneship and a preliminary trial to demonstrate whether they are fitted and capable of performing the medical work the Navy requires of surgeons.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think it is a good measure. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the en-grossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, this is a bill which was recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was drafted by the Commission in cooperation with a member of the legal staff of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. Hearings were held on the bill. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Truman] was chairman of the subcommittee, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Tobey], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Hill], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Johnson] were members of the subcommittee. During an extended adjournment of the hearings, every feature of the bill to which the attorneys for the railroads objected was discussed in detail in conference with them, and it was finally agreed by everyone concerned, including the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the bill in its present form will not unduly burden or hamper the regular conduct of the railroads' business and that they had no further suggestions with respect to its form. They all stated that they did not wish to be heard further on the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the purpose of the bill? Mr. WHEELER. The purpose of the bill is to prevent certain wasteful expenditures of money by the railroads such as those which took place between the years 1922 and 1929, when they speculated in the stocks and securities of other railroads, and suffered tremendous losses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the

the following letter from the president, Board of Commissioners: MAY 13, 1939.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,

Hon. Jennings Randolph,

Chairman, Committee on the District of Columbia,

United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Randolph: The Commissioners have received for the purpose of reporting thereon a copy of H. R. 5516, Seventysixth Congress, first session, entitled "A bill for the relief of Charlotte E. Hunter."

This bill provides that, notwithstanding provisions of an act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, as amended, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to place on the retirement list of teachers retired under directed to place on the retirement list of teachers retired under the provisions of such act the name of Charlotte E. Hunter, for-merly a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and to pay, out of the fund established by such act, an annuity computed as provided in such act; and that the said Charlotte E. Hunter shall be accredited with and entitled to count for such purposes, in addition to all other periods of service to which she may be legally entitled, the period of her employment as such school teacher from February 5, 1895, to April 12, 1919, both dates inclu-

The teachers' retirement fund is maintained by contributions made by acting teachers and augmented by District-appropriated funds. If this bill is enacted into law, it would mean that Charlotte E. Hunter would receive an annuity of approximately $65 per month payable from the teachers' retirement fund, to which Miss Hunter did not contribute. There are a number of former teachers now living in the District of Columbia in the same position as Miss Hunter, in that they retired from the service prior to the passage of the above-mentioned act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia" and have not contributed to the teachers' retirement fund and do not, therefore, come within the provisions of the act.

The Commissioners feel that certain facts are present in Miss Hunter's case which entitle it to consideration on its own merits separate and apart from any other request that might be subsequently submitted. For example, it appears that Miss Hunter went to Germany to study the kindergarten system at the request of the late Superintendent G. F. T. Cook, in charge of colored schools, and upon her return undertook the supervision of the kindergarten for a number of years without additional compensation, there being no funds available for a salary to reward such services. She also directed a home for the blind at the Harriet Tubman Aid to the Blind, Inc., an institution supported entirely by voluntary contributions, without compensation.

You are advised that the Board of Education has formally acted on this bill and has no objection to its passage.

The Commissioners believe the legislation is desirable and wish to report favorably on the bill and urge its early enactment. Respectfully.

M. C. HAZEN

President, Board of Commissioners, D. C.

This bill is solely a private bill for the relief of Charlotte E. Hunter and in no way exchanges existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING subsequently said:

Mr. President, I was diverted for a moment in conversation with the Senator from Kansas when Calendar No. 1062, Senate bill 1214, was called. I remember that we had considerable controversy over a measure, I think similar to this in the last session of Congress. I think we should have had an explanation of the bill. It is to provide for more permanent tenure for persons carrying the mail on star

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the subcommittee, after a long study, in connection with which it took the matter up with the Department, recommended the amendment which the bill proposes to make in the law. I wish to be frank with the Senator, and say that as to one part of the bill the Post Office Department does not express itself. The reason for that is that the Bureau of the Budget did not favor it. That is the part of the bill which would authorize the Postmaster General, when and if it was in the best interest of the service, to permit an extension of a contract already let, after that contract had been in force and effect for 4 years and the services were satisfactory. I hope the Senator will not object to the measure because, in my judgment and in the judgment of those who studied the matter, it will result in great benefit to the Service.

Mr. KING. The Senator may recall that at the last session when this measure was under considerationMr. McCARRAN. I remember it very well.

Mr. KING. There were very serious conflicts between those who had the contracts and those who desired them, and there was considerable evidence tending to show that the improvements were necessary, and would be made if there was open bidding and others might bid for the contracts.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I may say in reply that, while I cannot state definitely that all the discrepancies and differences between the several groups in these regions have been ironed out, no objection has been filed against the bill, nor against its amended form, and everything has been done by the committee and by the subcommittee to attempt to iron out those differences. I had a group representing the star routes meet together with Mr. Cole and Mr. O'Connell, representing the Post Office Department, in my office for hours pursuant to the investigation of the committee, and this bill is the result. If the Senator does not object to the passage of the bill, I think he will find that great benefit will flow from it. I have in mind, in answering the Senator, the history of the legislation which we considered 2 years ago and then last year, and so on. The bill is the result of the study which was made of the subject over a considerable period of time.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator two questions. First, would the bill promote the best interests of the Government, and, secondly, is it intended to perpetuate in control those who already have contracts, and to prevent any further competition?

Mr. McCARRAN. My answer is, first of all, to say that, in my judgment, it promotes the best interest of the Government. Second, it does not perpetuate the tenure of office of contractors for themselves. So that my answer may be fully understood, I will say that at all times at the expiration of a contract the Postmaster General may or may not grant continuance of the contract. He has it in his power to do it at any time.

PENSIONS RESULTING FROM DISABILITY OR DEATH IN CONFLICT IN FAR EAST

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1643) to provide pensions at wartime rates for disability or death incurred in line of duty as a direct result of the conflict in the Far East, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment on page 2, line 1, before the word "regulation", to strike out "the" and to insert "this", so as to make the bill read:

as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph I of part II, Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended (U.S.C., title 38, ch. 12, appendix; Executive Order No. 6156, dated June 6, 1933, is hereby amended by adding a new subparagraph (d) to read as follows:

"(d) Any veteran or the dependents of any deceased veteran otherwise entitled to pension under the provisions of part II of this regulation shall be entitled to receive the rate of pension provided in part I of this regulation, if it is determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs that the injury or disease resulting in disability or death was incurred in line of duty as a direct result of the conflict in the Far East: Provided, That if an injury or death for which pension is payable under this subparagraph is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some foreign government to pay damages therefor, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall require the beneficiary to assign to the United States all his right, title, or interest in the indemnity payments made by such foreign government before any payments shall be made under this subparagraph."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIMITATIONS OF PROFITS OF CERTAIN CONTRACTORS

C., Supp. IV, 496; sec. 14 of Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), to adjust the limitations on the profits of certain contractors with the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to add a new section 2 at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

SEC. 2. The amendments made by this act shall be applicable to all contracts and subcontracts completed within an income taxable year ending after April 3, 1939.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri explain the bill, please?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The bill can be explained by reference to page 2 of the report of the committee, which contains in parallel columns a statement of the difference between the present law and the proposed amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the celerity with which we are considering the bills on the calendar, I have no time to sit down and read the two parallel columns. Will the Sentor explain briefly what the bill proposes?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The items of difference in the bill are set out in those two columns more briefly than I could possibly explain them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the bill go over until I can read the two columns.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no objection. I will say in explanation without going into the details, that the bill simply provides to equalize certain conditions affecting employees on the Canal Zone as far as may be. The fact is that service in tropical countries shortens the lives of men who work there. Experience has proved that men who have been employed by the Panama Canal authority, on leaving the Panama Canal Zone live only on an average of 2 years and 6 months.

This bill is sponsored by the American Federation of Labor. The representatives of the American Federation of Labor appeared before the committee to advocate certain slight changes, reducing the age of voluntary retirement after 30 years service from 62 to 58 years, and to make certain provisions for the buying of additional annuities. There are certain technical matters which will require more than the time allowed by the rules of the Senate when legislation is considered on the call of the calendar. If the Senator from Wisconsin desires to object, I am perfectly willing that the bill go over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the statement which the Senator from Missouri has made completely satisfied my interest in the matter. All I asked for was a general statement as to what the bill sought to accomplish. The Senator having made the statement here, I am satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

approved June 25, 1938, was announced as next in order.
Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, on yesterday the House passed the bill H. R. 5684, which is identical to Senate bill 2153. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and considered immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 5684) amending the act of Congress of June 25, 1938 (ch. 710, 52 Stat. 1207), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay salaries and expenses of the chairman, secretary, and interpreter of the Klamath General Council, members of the Klamath Business Committee and other committees appointed by said Klamath General Council, and official delegates of the Klamath Tribe, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1789) to authorize the cancelation of deportation proceedings in the case of Florence Sinclair Cooper and daughter, Margaret Lavallie, was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that appears to be a bill affecting the cancelation of deportation proceedings. It has never been considered by the Committee on Immigration. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the case is one involving an Indian woman and her daughter who came over to the United States from Canada. The wife and daughter did not have a visa. This woman is married to a Crow Indian in the United States. If she and her daughter were deported now she would have to go to Canada, be separated from her husband for a while, then come back to the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not doubt that the bill is very meritorious, but heretofore all bills which authorized cancelation of deportation proceedings have been referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator that the bill should have gone to that committee, but because it related to an Indian it was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs automatically.

Mr. RUSSELL. It would be just as logical to say that a bill dealing with the transportation of aliens to a foreign country should go to the Foreign Relations Committee rather than to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. WHEELER. I entirely agree with the Senator from Georgia. The bill was, by error on the part of someone, sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and having gone there it was considered by that committee. The case is meritorious, and it should be passed in order to save this woman and her daughter from being deported. The Department has recommended the enactment of this measure.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no doubt the measure is meritorious, but I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, from the Puyallup Tribe of Indians of Washington, for Indian sanatorium purposes, tracts Nos. 6 and 7, containing 38 50/100 acres, including all tribalowned improvements thereon, of the Indian addition to the city of Tacoma, Wash., established under the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. 633); title to be conveyed to the United States by such tribal officials as the Puyallup Tribal Council shall authorize by resolution and by such form of relinquishment or deed as the Secretary of the Interior may designate.

SEC. 2. In order to carry out the provisions of section 1 hereof there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $228,525, which sum shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior in equal shares to the members of the Puyallup Indian Tribe, determined in accordance with the constitution and bylaws of the tribe approved May 13, 1936, as of the date of the passage of this act under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That acceptance by each individual or by his or her natural or legal guardian or heirs of the pro rata share of the amount hereby authorized to be appropriated shall be recognized as completely extinguishing any and all right or interest such member of the tribe might have had in said property.

nized as completely extinguishing any and all right or interest such member of the tribe might have had in said property.

SEC. 3. The fulfillment of the provisions of section 2 hereof shall not bar the hospitalization of or medical attention to members of the Puyallup Tribe at the Indian sanatorium referred to in section 1.

SEC. 2. That compensation to the individual Indian owners of the allotted lands within the area described in section 1 shall be made from moneys appropriated for the construction of the Bull Lake Dam and Reservoir at the appraised value of the easements: Provided, That should any individual Indian not agree to accept the appraised value of the easement as it affects his land, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire such easement by condemnation proceedings.

SEC. 3. The easements herein granted shall not interfere with the use by the Indians of the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation of the lands herein dealt with and the waters of Bull Lake Creek and the reservoir insofar as the use by the Indians shall not be inconsistent with the use of said lands for reservoir purposes.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to perform any and all acts and to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

CANCELATION OF CERTAIN NOTES ACQUIRED BY FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1710) to provide for the cancelation of certain notes acquired by the Farm Credit Administration as a result of the activities of the Federal Farm Board, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "notes", to strike out "executed" and insert "given for the purpose of acquiring capital stock in the Northwest Grain Association, Minneapolis, Minn."; and in line 7, after the word "the", to strike out "State of Montana" and insert "States of Montana, Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration is authorized and directed to cancel any notes given for the purpose of acquiring capital stock in the Northwest Grain Assothe purpose of acquiring capital stock in the Northwest Grain Association, Minneapolis, Minn., by any person, association, or corporation in the States of Montana, Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota which have been assigned to or otherwise acquired by the United States, or the Farm Credit Administration as an agency of the United States, as security for the payment of any sums now or heretofore owed to the Northwest Grain Association. Upon the cancelation of such notes, all persons shall be relieved of all liability for making any payment of principal or interest upon such notes and of all liability for making any payment upon any judgment which may have been secured in any action based upon such notes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in 1930, as a part of the Farm Board activities, the Farm Board sent out to the States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana, certain representatives who caused the farmers of those States to buy stock in a cooperative organization which was known as the Northwest Grain Association, and which was represented to the farmers of those States as being the organization with which they would be compelled to affiliate if they were to receive the benefits of the cooperative provisions of the Farm Act at that time.

A year later, in 1931, by the action of the Farm Board in connection with the National Grain Corporation, the activities of this more or less local organization were not only curtailed but practically eliminated. As a result of that circumstance the stock which these people purchased in the regional organization became worthless. They had made down payments on their stock. They are not asking for the return of the money which they paid. However, they are asking that the notes which were given for the balances due upon the stock be canceled, and the purpose of the bill, which was introduced by the Senator from Montana IMr. Wheelerl is to effect the cancelation of the

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Why should not the Department of Agriculture, or some of its agencies which perpetrated this wrong-from the Senator's statement I assume there was some sort of wrong-be required to pay?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think undoubtedly it should be required to pay back the money received. However, the bill came to the committee in this form, to cancel certain

Mr. KING. What authority had Mr. Wallace or any of his agents-

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It was not Mr. Wallace. The events I have described happened in 1930, under the Farm Act of that year, when it was thought that by creating regional cooperative organizations it would be possible to solve the farm problem. The act which really resulted in damage to these people came a year later, when it was made impossible for the regional organization to function.

Mr. KING. What is the total amount of the outstanding obligations?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think it amounts to only $24,000 or $25,000.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it is not that much. It amounts to about $15,000.

Mr. KING. As I understand, the purpose of the bill is to cancel the obligations referred to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUND OF CERTAIN PROCESSING TAXES ON HOGS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 66) making provisions for the refund of the processing tax on hogs marketed for slaughter by the raisers and producers who in fact bore all or part of the burden of such tax, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "person", to strike out "or persons, or their heirs or assigns"; in line 6, after the word "Agricultural", to insert "Adjustment"; in line 7, after the word "that", to strike out "the" and insert "such"; at the beginning of line 8, to insert "or his legal representatives"; in line 8, after the word "such", to strike out "tax refunded, provided, such claimant or claimants or their heirs or assigns show" and insert "tax or part thereof, refunded to him, if it is shown"; in line 15, after the figures "1936", to insert "insofar as such title may be applicable"; and in line 18, after the word "by", to strike out "the raisers and the producers," and insert "such person", so as to read:

That any person who raised or produced and marketed hogs for slaughter on which there was levied, collected, or paid a processing tax, under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, prior to the time that such act was held unconstitutional, or his legal representative, may have such tax, or part thereof, refunded to him, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, or to the satisfaction of the Board of Review, or the trial court, as the case may be, under provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936, insofar as such title may be applicable, that all or part of the burden of such processing tax was in fact charged to and borne by such person and was in fact deducted from the market price of such hogs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 19, after the word "hogs", to insert: "The amount of refund of such processing tax to which any claimant shall be entitled with respect to any particular quantity of hogs marketed shall be an amount equal to the processing tax payable upon the processing of an equal quantity of hogs at the time such particular quantity of hogs was marketed minus any amount by which the spread between the average hog product value at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during the month in which they were marketed and the average hog price at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during the month in which they were marketed was less than the amount of such processing tax plus 65 cents. The account sales kept by the vendor, or by the vendee, or by an agent of either shall be accepted as proof when properly identified."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 13, after the word "Any", to strike out "person or persons or their heirs or assigns who raised or produced and marketed such hogs for slaughter", and insert "claimant"; in line 16, after the figures "1936," to insert "insofar as such title may be applicable"; in line 17, after word "and", to insert "shall"; in line 19, after the word "appeal" and the comma, to strike out the word "as"; in line 19, after the word "provided", to insert "for"; in line 20, after the figures "1936", to insert "insofar as such title may be applicable", so as to read:

Any claimant may prove his claim under the provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936, insofar as such title may be applicable, and shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits including the right of review and appeal, provided for by title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 insofar as such title may be applicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 23, after the words "from the", to strike out the word "effective"; in the same line, after the word "date", to insert "of enactment"; on page 4, line 1, after the word "such", to strike out "effective"; and in line 3, after "Commissioner" and the period, to insert "No fees shall be charged for filing any such claim. It shall not be necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney", so as to read:

Provided, however, That such claim, if not previously filed, must be filed with the Commissioner at Washington, D. C., within 1 year from the date of enactment of this act, and proof must be submitted on any and all claims within 18 months from such date in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner. No fees shall be charged for filing any such claim. It shall not be necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the amount involved, and upon what ground it is alleged that the Government should make refunds.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the bill has been before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry since the middle of February. The subcommittee has held extensive hearings on the bill, and the bill was reported favorably on July 25.

Mr. President, this is the last bill on the calendar. In my opinion, it has much greater merit than many of the bills which were hurriedly passed this afternoon.

The report of the committee states:

Under the terms of Senate Joint Resolution 66 there is provided the mechanics by which a farmer may proceed to recover hogprocessing taxes illegally levied under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933.

The claimants have proved their claims to the satisfaction of the authorities, and the money is due them in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court.

According to the report, the average claim is $433. I do not know exactly what amount is involved; but I do know that the claims are just, and that the claimants should be given the right to submit their claims.

Mr. KING. Are the claimants residents of some particular section of the country?

Mr. GURNEY. No; the bill covers all sections of the country.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator any idea of the amount which will be claimed?

Mr. GURNEY. I do not believe many farmers keep such good records that the claims can be filed 100 percent. The claims go back to a period of time possibly 4 or 5 years ago, when the hog processing tax was being collected. As was shown by the testimony before the committee, the tax was all taken away from the producer, not the processor or the consumer. It was taken away from the producer, and it lowered the price the farmer actually received for his hogs.

Mr. KING. This was one of the illegal proceedings of the Department of Agriculture under which farmers were mulcted illegally and unjustly.

Mr. GURNEY. That is entirely correct.

Mr. KING. I think the joint resolution should be passed. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

COLUMBIAN FOUNTAIN, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senate just passed Calendar No. 1086, Senate Joint Resolution 178, authorizing the selection of a site and the erection thereon of the Columbian Fountain in Washington, D. C. My attention has been called to the fact that the House has passed and sent over to the Senate House Joint Resolution 159, covering the same matter.

I move that the vote by which Senate Joint Resolution 178 was passed be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that House Joint Resolution 159 be laid before the Senate and substituted for Senate Joint Resolution 178.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution coming over from the House.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection thereon of the Columbian Fountain in Washington, D. C., was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That authority is hereby granted to any association organized within 2 years from date of approval of this joint resolution for that purpose to erect the Columbian Fountain on an appropriate site on grounds now owned by the United States in the District of Columbia other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, the Mall, or the Tidal Basin area. The location of said fountain and the plan for the development of the site shall be submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Park and Planking Commission for the site of the State of the Sta Park and Planning Commission for advisory assistance and the construction shall be under the direction of the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior: Provided, That the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of said fountain and that unless funds, which in the estimation of the Secretary of the Interior are sufficient to insure the completion of the fountain, are certified available, and the erection of this fountain begun within 5 years from and after the passage of this joint resolution, the authorization hereby granted is revoked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objections to the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 159?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that Calendar No. 1086, Senate Joint Resolution 178, be indefinitely postponed. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 178 is indefinitely postponed.

That concludes the calendar.

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK NATIONAL MEMORIAL, STATE OF INDIANA Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment House bill 6528 and ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6528) to provide for the creation of the George Rogers Clark National Memorial, in the State of Indiana, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK M. SMITH

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, has the calendar been concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar has been concluded.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, earlier in the day there was reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, Senate bill 2787, for the relief of Maude Smith. I ask that House bill 4261, for the relief of the estate of Frank M. Smith, which has been messaged over from the House and is now on the clerk's desk, be substituted for the Senate bill and immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives. The bill (H. R. 4261) for the relief of the estate of Frank M. Smith, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Frank M. Smith, deceased, formerly of Kerens, Tex., the sum of $2,500 on account of the death of the said Frank M. Smith, who was killed on January 5, 1939, as a result of a fall into an unguarded open drainage ditch of a Works Progress Administration project in the southwestern part of Kerens, in Navarro County, Tex.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection. agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the with this claim, and the salar standard of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 4261?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2787 is indefinitely postponed.

RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE ALASKA RAILROAD

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few moments ago on the calendar we reached Calendar No. 1067, House bill 2178, and Calendar 1068, House bill 2642, dealing with the Alaska Railroad Retirement Act. I objected to them until I could obtain further information. Both bills are meritorious, and I ask unanimous consent to recur to them and for their present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bills?

There being no objection-

The bill (H. R. 2178) to amend sections 6 and 7 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees of the Alaska Railroad, Territory of Alaska, who are citizens of the United States," approved June 29, 1936, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed; and

The bill (H. R. 2642) to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees of the Alaska Railroad, Territory of Alaska, who are citizens of the United States," approved June 29, 1936, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAXES ON TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY IN UNITED STATES NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a few moments ago on the call of the calendar we reached House bill 6687, Calendar 1071, a bill to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property or use thereof occurring in United States national parks.

The purpose of the bill was to assist the States which have a sales tax in the orderly collection of their taxes. However, there is some opposition to the bill from the Interior Department. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior in regard to the question, so that Senators from States which have Indian reservations may examine it, because it is hoped later to bring this measure up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, August 1, 1939.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,

Chairman of the Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: It has come to my attention that H. R. 6687, entitled "A bill to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military, and other reservations or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction," is now on the Senate Calendar.

Although the proposed legislation involves matters of vital concern to this Department, it has been passed by the House of Representatives and reported out by the Senate Finance Committee before our report thereon could be submitted. Therefore, I earnestly request that the bill be recommitted to the Senate Finance Committee for further consideration.

The bill presents a serious question as to whether it would are

The bill presents a serious question as to whether it would authorize the levy of State sales and other taxes on transactions within Indian reservations. We have been advised by the office of the Senate legislative counsel that it is not intended to apply to such transactions and will not be so construed. It is possible, however, that the bill, if enacted, may be construed otherwise by State-taxing authorities and by State courts. If the bill were to be construed to apply to Indian reservations, it would probably be in violation of established constitutional and treaty rights of the be construed to apply to Indian reservations, it would probably be in violation of established constitutional and treaty rights of the Indians and doubtless would lead to prolonged litigation. It certainly would be in contravention of the established departmental policy that transactions between Indians on Indian reservations should remain a matter of Federal rather than of State control. In order to avoid any possible question on this score, I recommend that the bill, if not recommitted to your committee, be amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso: "Provided, That this act shall not affect existing law relating to taxation on Indian reservations."

Since this report has not been submitted for clearance to the Bureau of the Budget, no commitment can be made as to the relationship of the proposed legislation, or to the suggested amendment, to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

E. K. BURLEW, Acting Secretary of the Interior.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I would be untrue to my obligations as an American citizen were I to permit the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress to close without calling to the attention of the Senate and the entire country the sad and humiliating plight of the more than half a million fellow Americans who make up the community of the city of Washington, D. C.

Of all Americans of continental and contiguous United States, these are the only ones who are deprived of all voice in both their national and local governments. Of course, there are scattered throughout the States lunatics and convicts who likewise are deprived of participation, but their deprivation is a protective measure. No such reason exists as to the residents of the District of Columbia.

This great American community of the National Capital is subject to all national laws and all local laws enacted by the Congress of the United States, which is its only legislative body. These people have no representation in the Congress which legislates for them and really have little influence with legislators, who are selected by all the people throughout the country except those living in the District of Columbia.

These people, whose home is in the city of Washington, have no say whatever regarding their taxes, either as to kind or amount. Nor do they have any say as to the purposes for which the resulting tax money is to be spent. There was never a more flagrant example of taxation without representation.

When I contemplate such a deplorable state of affairs I am humiliated and ashamed that this Nation permits so flagrant a violation of fundamental American principles to exist at the very seat of the Government of the United States. The unfriendly attitude of some of the Members of our National Legislature toward these voteless and unrepresented Americans can be in part attributed to the lack of these political rights. However, I am constrained to believe that much of such manifestation of unfriendliness is due to the lack of knowledge of the true conditions prevailing in the District of Columbia and the circulation of misleading statements which lack even the slightest essence of truth.

It is my firm belief that if the people back in the States and in every one of the 435 congressional districts understood the true situation in the District of Columbia they would not tolerate the indifference or unfriendly attitude of their legislators, but would demand that American principles be put into operation at the Nation's Capital. The long list of grievances against King George III enumerated in the Declaration of Independence are more than matched by those which might be listed by the voteless and unrepresented people of the District of Columbia.

This is the Nation's city, and by the Constitution is placed under the exclusive legislative power of Congress. This was done by the founding fathers of our Republic in the national interest solely, and was to avoid the existence of any dual sovereignty. But I can see no justification for depriving these people from voting representation in the Congress, which exercises this exclusive power.

The national interest is the only reason or excuse which can be advanced for this departure from the principles of representative government; and there can be neither reason nor excuse for it being carried beyond what is required in the national interest.

While the District of Columbia is declared by law to be a municipal corporation, it is unlike any other in the country. Its problems, to a large extent, differ from those of any other community. Attempts to compare it with other communities have usually been unsuccessful and far from satisfactory.

The local government consists of a board of three Commissioners, two of whom are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The third Commissioner is an officer of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, detailed for a term of such service by the President. The two civilian Commissioners are required to have resided in the District for 3 years next preceding their appointment and not to have claimed residence elsewhere during such period.

The Board of Commissioners are the chief administrative officers of the District of Columbia and in addition have been given the authority to enact certain police and other municipal regulations. The local government is in no way responsible to the people of the District over whom it rules.

During the present Congress there has been considerable subcommittee and public discussion regarding proposals to reorganize the government of this District. A draft of what is in effect a new city charter has been introduced in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. While radical changes are proposed in the set-up of the local government there is no proposal to give the people participation in the national councils nor in the local government. Neither is there any proposal to give the people an opportunity to vote on the proposed new charter as would be permitted in any other municipality.

The distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] has made a study of District of Columbia affairs and recently made an earnest effort, backed by the Senate, to have enacted into law a definite formula by which the United States would have to bear an equitable share of the cost of the maintenance and development of the Capital City. He was defeated in his praiseworthy efforts through prejudice based on misunderstanding and lack of knowledge of the true status of the District of Columbia.

Someone has referred to Washington as "the best known and at the same time the most unknown community in the world; the most misunderstood of all." After a service of more than 20 years in the Senate, and continuous membership on the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia throughout that period, I am ready to approve that statement.

The wrong ideas regarding the Capital City are as numerous as they are erroneous. To some this is a tax-free paradise to which the retired wealthy and the "economic royalists" flee to avoid taxation. In some minds the notion prevails that Washington, D. C., "is supported by the Nation with money wrung from the meager earnings of Americans and flung as beggars' alms to a mendicant people."

To some the population of the District of Columbia consists of a horde of Federal job holders who continue to hold their citizenship and vote in the States from which they came.

Many men come to Congress with such erroneous notions regarding this National Capital community and some continue to hold such impressions. Many are too engrossed in the job of representing their constituents to give any time or thought to learning the truth regarding this seat of the Government of the United States over which Congress by provision of the Constitution exercises exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever.

But the District of Columbia is not a tax-free paradise. The people here pay both National and local taxes in the same manner as in other communities. However, unlike other communities, they have no voice in the enactment of the tax laws under which they are taxed nor any say as to the expenditure of the money collected from such taxes.

These voteless and unrepresented Americans pay annually in National taxes an amount greater than each one of more than half of the States and more than the combined collections from nine States. Such payments help make up the fund from which the complex Federal Government, with its far-flung ramifications, draws its chief support.

In local taxes the people of this District pay an amount comparable with the payments in other American cities similar in size and standards of municipal service.

Instead of being supported by the Federal Government, the National Capital community paid through local taxes during the last fiscal year, 1939, about 90 percent of its cost. The Federal Government made a payment of $5,000,000 toward the expenses of the year. This was a very modest amount when one remembers the fact that the Federal realty holdings, that of foreign governments and of national organizations, and other property exempted from taxation aggregate a total of well over 50 percent of the entire taxable area.

These Federal holdings and other exemptions are annually increasing, while the tendency and the practice is to reduce the amount of the Federal payment. If we continue as things have been going with the rapid increase of Federal holdings, there will be an increasing penalty on the residents of the District of Columbia for the privilege of remaining in this community.

Other items of evasion of obligation by the Federal Government which should not be overlooked are the water supply to the extensive Government establishments in Washington, without cost to the Government but at the expense of the private consumers of water and further the exemption from contribution to the highway fund as required of other users of the highways of the District. These highway funds come from the local tax on motor-vehicle fuel. Though the United States operates a great number of motor vehicles over the streets, avenues, and other highways of the District, it pays no tax on the gasoline consumed.

There is an equitable and logical obligation on the part of the Federal Government to pay substantially toward the operation, maintenance, and upbuilding of its Capital city and compelling reasons why it should not continue to unload this burden in an increasing degree upon the local community.

The following, quoted from an article in the Washington Star of June 20, 1939, sets forth forcibly some of the bases of the obligation of the Federal Government toward its Capital City:

THE EQUITABLE OBLIGATION

Washington contends that the true basis of the Nation's obligation of proportionate contributions to the maintenance and development of the Capital is not solely or primarily untaxed ownership of District real estate (the assessed value of which recently was placed at $703,615,000 in a Federal report to Congress on Government property holdings), though a substantial and continuous obligation does arise in connection with such ownership. The strongest obligation resting upon the Nation is equitable in its nature and based primarily on the circumstances of the Capital's creation and the treatment of the Capital by the Nation's absolute despotic control of the Nation's City, including the Nation's absolute despotic control of the National Capital.

The general Government by the fact of planning a magnificent Capital covering a large area and characterized by broad streets and avenues and reservations unsuitable for a commercial city and by founding this Capital in a place comparatively uninhabited, as well as by the terms of the bargain with the owners of the soil, by its advertised promises to purchasers from it of donated Wash-Washington contends that the true basis of the Nation's obliwell as by the terms of the bargain with the owners of the soil, by its advertised promises to purchasers from it of donated Washington lots and by the declarations of its representatives at the founding of the city and afterward showed an intention to build up a national city at the Nation's expense upon a grand scale irrespective of the future population of the District. The Capital was to be primarily a center of Federal action, and the expense of its support and adornment was not to be limited by the scanty resources of whatever permanent population it might acquire.

Obviously the primary obligation in the arrangement between

Obviously, the primary obligation in the arrangement between Nation and District taxpayers should be upon that party to it which absolutely controls every cent of the money contributed which absolutely controls every cent of the money contributed for Capital maintenance by both parties, local and national, and which has undivided and despotic power to fix the amount of local tax contribution, to decide by what method of taxation it shall be collected, to collect it and to spend it. Clearly in equity the primary obligation should not be shifted to the Capital, originally the incidental contributor, which has no power of contributor of its country where each whose selections. trol even of its own tax money at any stage, and whose sole func-tion in respect to taxation and its financial status is to petition, to obey, and to pay.

From the beginning the Nation's obligation in respect to Capital maintenance and upbuilding has been in equity and on principle primary, dominating and, like its power to govern, exclusive and

POLITICAL POWER AND FINANCIAL OBLIGATION COUPLED

Primary and full responsibility, both in respect to the control and to the maintenance and upbuilding of the Capital, is in Congress representing the Nation. Political power and financial obligation are inseparably coupled. If the Nation controls, it pays; and to the extent that it controls, it pays. Washington is the only capital in the world in which, if certain policies prevail, the Nation will do all the controlling and none of the paying.

Mr. President, this only scratches the surface of the fiscal problems of the District of Columbia. The citizens of the District, through well-organized and able civic committees for many years have submitted compelling information on the subject in the form of briefs, petitions, and graphic charts and tables of statistics. That Congress has not solved this problem is no fault of the local citizenry.

The people of our country, I fear, underestimate the importance of the District of Columbia from a population standpoint compared with the population of some of the sovereign States of the Union. The census of 1930, which is the latest, gave the District population as 486,869. The latest estimate of population made by the United States Bureau of the Census, as of July 1, 1937, gives the number at that time as 627,000.

Mr. Theodore W. Noyes, editor of the Washington (D. C.) Evening Star, published on the last national election day some interesting population studies and other pertinent information, from which I quote the following excerpts:

DISTRICT MORE POPULOUS THAN EIGHT STATES

The Americans of the District of Columbia, according to the The Americans of the District of Columbia, according to the census of 1930, outnumber the Americans of eight of the States—New Hampshire, Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Vermont, Delaware, Wyoming, and Nevada. They send as agents to the National Legislature to make laws for them: District of Columbia, 0; New Hampshire, 4; Idaho, 4; Vermont, 3; Arizona, 3; New Mexico, 3; Delaware, 3; Wyoming, 3; and Nevada, 3.

Montana and Utah in 1930 exceeded very slightly the District of Columbia in population. They send to the National Legislature to engage in the councils of the greatest representative Republic in the world: Montana, 4 men; Utah, 4 men; District of Columbia, 0 men.

POPULATION OF VOTING AGE EXCEEDED IN 1930 THAT OF 10 STATES

Its population of voting age (over 21) in 1930 was 341,465, exceeding that of 10 of the States.

It is contended, however, that these figures of voting age are misleading for the reason that there are thousands of District residents who vote in the States and who might not vote in the District even if they had the opportunity. The census of 1930 reports dents who vote in the States and who might not vote in the District even if they had the opportunity. The census of 1930 reports that there had been enumerated in the District 15,105 thoroughly qualified recent actual voters in the States. The District of Columbia political and partisan leaders in the Presidential campaign of 1932 estimated that there were from 55,000 to 60,000 persons in the District who could, if they registered, vote in the States. Other estimates, including some that were obviously unreasonable, carried the figure of possible potential voters in the States up to 80,000.

If from the total population of voting age in the States and

If from the total population of voting age in the States and District (in 1930) the foreign-born residents not naturalized be deducted, and if from the District's population of voting age deducted, and if from the District's population of voting age there be further subtracted 80,000 (covering liberally every possible reasonable and some unreasonable deductions), the resulting District of Columbia potential voters who can vote nowhere else (251,439) would be only 6,102 less than that of New Hampshire (257,541), only 824 less than that of Utah (252,263), and 12,620 more than Arizona (238,819); 12,655 more than Idaho (238,784); 37,244 more than New Mexico (214,195); 48,001 more than Vermont (203,438); 109,309 more than Delaware (142,130); 124,309 more than Wyoming (127,230); and 195,726 more than Nevada (55,713). (55.713).

NATION'S SHAME OF UNAMERICANISM AT ITS HEART

An evil condition maintained by the Nation at the Nation's Capital is rightly viewed as typical and characteristic. The shame is national not local.

Autocratic nonrepresentative government in the only American territory governed exclusively by the Nation brands the Nation itself distinctly and indelibly as un-American. As is the Nation's city so is the Nation. The Capital is the Nation's heart. If the Republic is tainted with un-Americanism at its heart, the whole of the body politic is thus tainted.

Should not the Nation, irrespective of the just plea of the Washingtonians and purely as a national concern abolish the evil and injury-working paradox of nonrepresentative, un-American government of the National Capital territory under exclusive national control? Will not the people of the United States respond so vigorously to the District's appeal that before the next Presidential election this unjust and hurtful discrimination shall be removed?

How is it that District Americans do not exercise this right and power, a vital part of their American heritage?

The Constitution makers unintentionally omitted to fix the political status of the future residents of the 10 miles square, constituting the seat of Government, and unintentionally failed to give Congress the power, analogous to that which it possessed in relation to the admission of territories to statehood, of granting representation in Congress and electoral college to the population of the District when it became fit. lation of the District when it became fit.

An amendment to the Constitution is pending which corrects this unintentional omission.

Without making a State of the District of Columbia, and with-out depriving Congress of an atom of its constitutional exclusive legislative control of the National Capital, it empowers Congress to grant to the people of the District voting representation in Congress and the electoral college, whenever, in its judgment, they are fit to enjoy this right and to exercise this power.

DISTRICT FIT FOR NATIONAL REPRESENTATION

Are the people of the District fit in numbers, intelligence, and resources to enjoy these national rights and privileges of citizens of a State? Yes. They are American citizens assembled "in sufficient numbers in a limited space," and they meet all the territorial requirements of the community about to be admitted to full statements of the community about to be admitted to full statehood, though they are not in this constitutional amendment asking statehood for themselves.

The District exceeds in population every new State in the Union at the time of its admission except Oklahoma.

The community in intelligence, in public spirit, in patriotic devotion in every distinctive American characteristic is unsurpassed in the United States.

Mr. President, here at the very heart of our Nation are more than a half million as good Americans as are to be found any place under the Stars and Stripes. They are intelligent, public spirited, loyal, and patriotic, and are always to be found meeting all of the obligations of American citizens, both in war and in peace. In measuring up to these obligations of citizenship they are excelled by no other American citizen, but when it comes to their possession and exercise of vital and fundamental political rights, they are rated in the same class as the criminal and the lunatic.

These people, being subject to all laws enacted by Congress, are as vitally affected by, and interested in, all national legislation as are the citizens of the States, yet they are deprived of the right to participate through their duly elected representatives in the enactment of those laws. They are required to pay heavily in taxes for the support of the Nation, yet are denied representation in the legislature which determines the kind and the amount of these taxes, and how the resulting revenues shall be spent. They are required in time of war to bear arms in the service of their country, to fight, and possibly to die; yet they have no voice whatever in determining whether there shall be war, or at the conclusion of the war, as to the terms of peace. They are ruled over locally by administrative and judicial officers appointed by the President of the United States, but are denied participation in the selection of that President. They are also required to pay in taxes for the the support of the Nation's Capital, whatever the Congress, in which they are not represented, requires of them, and have no voice whatever as to what these taxes shall be or in deciding for what this money shall be spent.

Mr. President, were these people of the District of Columbia satisfied to rest content in this deprivation of their natural-born rights, they would be unworthy of the name They realize fully that they suffer a great "American." injustice through inaction of their fellow Americans in the States. They know that in fact and in truth they are really the subjects rather than the equals of the other citizens of their country. They know that the only possible relief from their anomalous situation is to be found through an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which will give Congress the power to correct this defect in our fundamental laws.

The framers of the Constitution, unintentionally, I am convinced, omitted to fix the political status of the future residents of the 10 miles square, constituting the seat of government, and unintentionally failed to give Congress the power, analagous to that which it possesses to admit territories to statehood and to grant representation in Congress and the electoral college to the people of the District.

Under existing conditions, the Congress is a National, State, and local legislature for the District of Columbia, but there are no representatives in the legislature of these people, who are thus governed without their consent. In consquence they can exercise only that right of doubtful value guaranteed by the Constitution "peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." Right here let me say, as a matter of practical politics, voteless petitioners carry little, if any, weight.

Mr. President, I have tried, and am continuing to try, to do more than just sympathize with these de-Americanized Americans. For a number of years I have introduced in the Senate a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which will remove the obstacles which now prevent these good fellow Americans from participating in the Government of their country.

This amendment, supported by the Citizens' Joint Committee on National Representation, which is a truly representative body of the organized citizenry of the District, is known as Senate Joint Resolution 35 and is pending before the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate.

The amendment would empower Congress, by appropriate legislation, to grant to the residents of the District the right of voting representation in the Senate and House of Representatives and among the electors for President and Vice President. It would also give the District residents the right to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States on an equal footing with the citizens of the States. This right, now denied to District citizens, is open even to aliens in the States.

The proposed amendment would not make a State of the District of Columbia, and would not deprive Congress of an atom of its constitutional legislative control of the National Capital. It does not detract from the power of Congress. but clothes it with a new power, to be exercised whenever the Congress, in its wisdom, shall decide that these voteless and unrepresented Washingtonians are fit to enjoy and exercise the rights and powers which are now denied them.

The Senate Committee on the District of Columbia in 1922 reported favorably a somewhat similar amendment, but the matter has never had the consideration of the Senate or of its Committee on the Judiciary.

Representative Harton W. Sumners of Texas, during the present session, introduced House Joint Resolution 257, proposing a much simpler amendment, to accomplish the same purpose. Its brevity and its proposal to permit Congress to delegate to a local government such of its legislative powers as it may desire appeals strongly to me. There is another reasonable feature which should appeal to Congress, that is, to make revocable, at the will of Congress, any legislation enacted under the proposed constitutional amendment.

At an informal referendum election in May 1938 the District citizens voted overwhelmingly for the privilege of the ballot and representation in the National Government. By a slightly smaller vote they recorded their desire for an elective local government.

Mr. President, there is no sound American reason for withholding these fundamental rights from this more than half a million Americans. I am convinced that a satisfactory solution of the District's problems can be found only through the granting of voting representation to District people in the Senate, House of Representatives, and among the electors of President and Vice President.

This, in my opinion, is the first step to make National American citizens of these people. Then, with their own representatives in the two Houses of Congress, clothed with the same privileges as those from the States, they will have an equal opportunity with other Americans to enter upon the solution of their accumulation of unsolved civic problems in the true American way.

I have serious doubts as to the advantages of an elective local government until the District possesses voting representation in Congress and among the Presidential electors. Whatever kind of a local government the District is given is apt to prove unsatisfactory while a Congress, in which it is not represented, continues to exercise without let or hindrance its power of exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever. That has been a source of weakness in local governments here in the past, and history has a way of repeating itself.

I am convinced that the chief reason for these people and their community being misunderstood, neglected, and treated unfairly is because of their political impotency. cure for this condition is through amendment of the Constitution and subsequent legislation establishing fundamental American principles of government here at the Nation's

Mr. President, I hope that the righteous cause of these voteless and unrepresented fellow Americans of the Capital community will appeal so strongly to the fundamental Americanism of the people of our country and the Congress that favorable consideration may be given these pending resolutions at the next session, and that District citizens will no longer have to sing that spirited, but humiliating, song composed by Frederic William Wile:

MY DISTRICT, 'TIS OF THEE (By Frederic William Wile) (Tune: America)

My District, 'tis of thee, Land without liberty, Of thee I sing.

Where Nation's laws are made, Where income tax is paid, Yet, when all's done and said, Freedom can't ring.

Land of the Congress folk, Citizenship a joke, At it we fling.

We scorn our shackled right, We mean some day to fight, With all our main and might, And suffrage bring.

Why should the District be Black sheep in land of free, Her spirit galled?

We send our sons to die, Heed the Republic's cry, With all patriots vie, Whene'er we're called.

Nation, at large, to you We raise our cry and hue: Hear our fair plea.

Tax without voice or vote Sounds a discordant note, See rank injustice smote, End tyranny!

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT

During the delivery of Mr. Capper's speech,

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I note from the Record for yesterday that while I was absent from the Chamber the Senate approved the conference report on Senate bill 281 dealing with civil-service retirement. I note that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] is in the Chamber. I merely wish to ask him whether or not the conference report upon that bill included postmasters in the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act, as provided in a bill passed by the Senate, which, as I recall, was Senate bill 577.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the conference report includes postmasters. Indeed, it includes the substance of everything that was contained in the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Wyoming and passed by the Senate earlier in the session, by virtue of which postmasters of the first, second, third, and fourth class were granted the benefits of the civil-service retirement law. The House, instead of passing the Senator's bill as an independent measure, simply incorporated it with the bill which is embraced in the conference report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator. Inasmuch as Senate bill 577 was passed by the Senate I was very anxious to make sure that there was some action at this session. The Senator's statement makes it clear that postmasters are included.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this interruption be placed at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Kansas who has so kindly yielded to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield and if so to whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. In my own right I ask what the parliamentary situation is. What was the request to which consent was given without an opportunity to inquire?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It was merely a request for informa-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Vermont that a colloquy took place between the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from West Virginia. The Senator from Wyoming asked unanimous consent that that colloquy be placed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Kansas rather than in the body of that speech.

Mr. AUSTIN. Another parliamentary inquiry. Did the Senator from Wyoming ask for action by the Senate preceding that request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming did not ask for any action by the Senate. The Senator from Wyoming simply asked the Senator from Kansas to yield to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that if he wants to complete his speech he had better go ahead and do it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question with reference to the matter about which he was queried by the Senator from Wyoming. Is the bill to which the Senator from Wyoming referred the bill that was considered by the Civil Service Committee of the Senate?

Mr. NEELY. It is the same bill and the one in relation to which the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] rendered exceptionally valuable service. With deep regret I inform the Senator that the House refused to pass the Senate bill in the form in which this body approved it. In fact, the House struck out of the Senate bill everything except the enacting clause. The Senate conferees offered to acquiesce in all the amendments made by the House excepting that which increased the beneficiaries' contribution to the retirement fund from 4 to 5 percent. But the conferees on the part of the House declined this offer. Thereupon the Senate conferees reluctantly agreed to the report which the Senate adopted yesterday evening because they believed that it contained all the benefits to the civil-service employees which could possibly be obtained during the present session of the Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

After the conclusion of Mr. Capper's speech,

AMENDMENT OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4998) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

G. M. GILLETTE,
W. J. BULOW,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WALL DOXEY,
R. M. KLEBERG,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before moving an executive session, I wish to say that we have cleaned up the calendar pretty well today. There are a few little bills, odds and ends, that we may take up tomorrow. Just what they are, I do not know yet, but the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] has a bill, the Senator from Florida has one or two bills, and one or two other Senators have measures that we may be able to take up separately. Outside of that, I do not see much work ahead of us for tomorrow. There may be conference reports ready for action, and so forth.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President I want to call attention to the nomination of Arthur A. Weng to be postmaster at Doggett, Mich., in place of W. A. Nelson. That nomination was confirmed July 29. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF TREATIES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are several treaties on the calendar, most of which are probably noncontroversial. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] desires now to take up and have considered and disposed of some of those treaties.

LIBERIA-CONSULAR CONVENTION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive D.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive D (76th Cong., 1st sess.), a consular convention between the United States of America and Liberia, signed at Monrovia on October 7, 1938, which was read the second time, as follows:

CONSULAR CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND LIBERIA

The President of the United States of America and the President The President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of Liberia, being desirous of defining the duties, rights, prerogatives, and immunities of consular officers of each country in the territory of the other country, have decided to conclude a convention to that end and have appointed the following Plenipotentiaries; that is to say:

The President of the United States of America:

CHARLES G. DAWES ARTHUR HENDERSON JA'FAR EL ASKERI SEAL [SEAL]

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as to this treaty I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it deals only with commerce and navigation. It is not a treaty of amity. The distinction between this treaty and the others is that we had a treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation ratified several years ago, at which time Great Britain was recognized as having a certain protectorate over Iraq. There was one clause in the treaty of amity at that time which caused a termination of the treaty of amity at the time Great Britain relinquished its protectorate over Iraq. Great Britain has relinquished that protectorate, and this treaty is to continue in force and effect not only the amity treaty, which would have expired at the time of the relinquishment of the protectorate, but it is to reenact the treaty of commerce and navigation. It is in the usual form.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield. Mr. AUSTIN. Does the protocol of January 9, 1933, between His Britannic Majesty and this Government continue in effect after this treaty is ratified?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; the protocol of 1933 has expired. That is the protocol which recognized the protectorate over Iraq. Section 7 is the only section that is affected by this treaty. The treaty of amity would have expired upon the termination of the protectorate by Great Britain, and this extends it instead of having it expire.

I may say to the Senator from Vermont that it is in the ordinary form of a treaty of amity, commerce, and navi-

Mr. PITTMAN. I move the adoption of the resolution of ratification.

CONVENTION BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND FINLAND

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that we proceed to the consideration of Calendar 14, Executive H.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive H (76th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Finland, signed at Helsinki on January 27, 1939, regulating the military obligations of persons possessing the nationality of both the high contracting parties, which was read the second time, as follows:

The United States of America and the Republic of Finland, being The United States of America and the Republic of Finland, being desirious of regulating the question of exemption from military obligations of persons possessing the nationality of both the High Contracting Parties, have decided to conclude a convention for that purpose, and have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Mr. H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Finland; and

The President of the Republic of Finland: Mr. Juho Eljas Erkko, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Finland;

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

A person possessing the nationality of both the High Contracting Parties who habitually resides in the territory of one of them and who is in fact most closely connected with that Party shall be exempt from all military obligations in the territory of the other Party.

ARTICLE H

The present convention shall be ratified and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Helsinki. It shall take effect in all its provisions on the day of the exchange of ratifications and shall continue in force for the term of ten years from that day. If within six months before the expiration of ten years from the day on which the present convention shall come into force, neither High Contracting Party notifies the other of an intention of terminating the convention upon the expiration of the aforesaid period of ten years, the convention shall remain in full force and effect after the aforesaid period and until six months from such a time as either of the High Contracting Parties shall have notified to the other an intention of terminating the convention.

notified to the other an intention of terminating the convention.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done in duplicate, in the English and Finnish languages, both authentic, at Helsinki, this twenty-seventh day of January, nineteen hundred and thirty-nine.

[SEAL] H. F. ARTHUR SCHOENFELD ELIAS ERKON

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this treaty provides that when the nationals of either of the contracting parties have resided in the other country for a substantial length of time, then the laws of the country in which they shall have resided shall govern as to military service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Rather irrelevantly I should like to say to the Senator from Nevada that I am not familiar with the provisions of the pending treaty, but I am certain that I voice the feeling of every American citizen when I say that any kind of a treaty or any sort of an accord between the United States and the Republic of Finland which would lead to better relations, relations even better than those which now exist between these two nations, would meet with the approval of every American citizen. Finland is the one nation on earth that has the entire respect of every American citizen.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am very pleased to have the Senator from Missouri make that statement, because I thoroughly agree with him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will.
Mr. CONNALLY. While I share with the Senator from Missouri his fine opinion of Finland, I do not subscribe to the theory that any government has the right to hand its citizens around for military service as though they were so many chattels. I do not see why an American citizen living in Finland any number of years, so long as he is an American citizen, should be subjected to the military laws or service of Finland. I have not read the treaty, but I should like to know how long the time of residence has to be.

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not explain before, as I should have, that this first deals with dual nationality; that is, where a subject of Finland, or citizen, now, has become naturalized in this country, or where a citizen of the United States has become naturalized in Finland.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will yield, as I have said. I am not familiar with the treaty, but I have recently had presented to me a case affecting a citizen of the United States who was subject to dual nationality with another power. This man was born in the United States, under our Constitution was a citizen of the United States, but happened to be traveling in Europe at the outbreak of the World War, and, in the country in which his father had been born, under the theory of dual nationality he was declared by the military authorities of Italy to be an Italian citizen, although he was born in the United States, and was a citizen of the United States, and he was pressed into military service.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Missouri does not believe that was right, does he?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not; but because he was forced into the service of the Kingdom of Italy, he was refused American citizenship when he returned, on the ground that he had renounced his American citizenship.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not a member of the distinguished committee of which the Senator from Nevada is chairman, and there is one expression in the treaty which is novel to me. and I should like to have the Senator's views about it.

The treaty reads:

ARTICLE I. A person possessing the nationality of both the High Contracting Parties.

That is not clear to me. What does that mean?

Mr. PITTMAN. We have met with that expression a great many times. A person is born in one country, we will say, and becomes naturalized in another. He is recognized as a citizen of the country in which he is naturalized. In some cases the government of the country in which he is born still claims him as a citizen. We have had that conflict. That is what this means.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then it is assumed that nationality can be acquired by a person voluntarily?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true. I will read the provision of the treaty, since it is very short:

A person possessing the nationality of both the High Contracting Parties who habitually resides in the territory of one of them and who is in fact most closely connected with that party shall be exempt from all military obligations in the territory of the other

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

EXTRADITION TREATY BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND MONACO

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the Senate now take up for consideration Executive I.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, Executive I (76th Cong., 1st sess.), an extradition treaty between the United States of America and Monaco, signed at Monaco on February 15, 1939, which was read the second time, as follows:

EXTRADITION TREATY

16. Crimes and offenses relating to the traffic in women and

17. Crimes and offenses covered by the laws concerning the use of and traffic in opium and other narcotics.

Extradition shall also be granted for the attempt to commit the acts listed above, or participation or complicity in the said acts, when such attempt, participation or complicity is punishable according to the laws of the two countries.

ARTICLE III

Requisitions for extradition shall be made by the diplomatic

Requisitions for extradition shall be made by the diplomatic agents, or, in their absence, either from the country or its seat of government, by the consuls or consular agents.

If the requisition concerns a fugitive who has been convicted after a hearing in court (contradictoirement), it must be accompanied with a duly authenticated copy of the sentence; if it concerns a fugitive who has merely been charged with a crime or offense or convicted in his default or absence, it must be accompanied with a duly authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest and of the depositions or other evidence upon which such warrant was issued. The procedure of extradition shall be followed accordwas issued. The procedure of extradition shall be followed according to the laws regulating extradition in force in the country on which the requisition is made.

ARTICLE IV

The arrest of the fugitive criminal may be requested on information even by telegraph, of the existence of a judgment of conviction or of a warrant of arrest.

In Monaco, the application for the arrest shall be addressed to the Minister of State, who shall transmit it to the proper authority.

In the United States of America, the application for arrest shall be addressed to the Secretary of State, who shall deliver a warrant certifying that the application is regular and requesting the competent authorities to take action thereon in conformity with law.

In each country, in case of urgency, the application for arrest may be addressed directly to the competent magistrate in conformity with the laws in force.

In both countries, the person provisionally arrested shall be released, if, within a period of forty days from the date of arrest in Monaco, or from the date of commitment in the United States of America, the formal requisition for extradition accompanied with the documents prescribed in the foregoing article has not been submitted by the diplomatic agent of the country making the requisition or, in his absence, by a consul or consular agent of said country.

ARTICLE V

The contracting Parties shall not be bound to deliver up their own citizens or subjects under the stipulations of this treaty.

ARTICLE VI

No person shall be surrendered if the offense for which his extradition is requested is of a political character, or if he proves that the requisition for his surrender has, in fact, been made with a view to try or punish him for an offense of a political character. If any question arises as to whether a case comes within the provisions of this article, the authorities of the Government on which the requisition is made shall decide.

However, when the violation comprises the act of murder, assassination or poisoning, either consummated or attempted, the fact that the offense was committed or attempted against the life of the Sovereign or Head of any State, or against the life of any member of his family, shall not be deemed sufficient to sustain that such crime or offense is of a political character, or that it has any connection with crimes or offenses of a political character.

ARTICLE VII

No person surrendered by one of the High Contracting Parties to the other shall be prosecuted, judged, or punished for any crime or offense committed prior to his extradition, other than the offense for which his surrender was accorded, and no person shall be arrested or detained by civil process for a cause prior to the extradition, unless, in either case, he has been at liberty for one month to leave the country, after having been tried, or, in case of conviction, after having either served his sentence or obtained pardon.

Extradition shall not be granted, under the stipulations of this Convention, if the person claimed has been tried for the same act in the country to which the requisition is addressed, or if, subsequent to the acts with which he is charged, the prosecution or the conviction, the action or the sentence has become barred by limitation, according to the law of the said country.

ARTICLE IX

If, at the time of the requisition, the person claimed is being prosecuted, or has been convicted of a crime or offense committed in the country of refuge, his extradition may be deferred until such prosecution is terminated, and/or until he has been released in conformity with law.

ARTICLE X

If the person claimed by one of the High Contracting Parties, in virtue of this treaty, is also claimed by one or more other Powers on account of crimes or offenses committed in their respective jurisdictions, his extradition shall be granted to the State whose demand is received first; unless the Government from which extradition is asked is bound by treaty, in case of concurrent demands, to accord preference to the one that is first in date, in which event that rule shall be followed, unless also an arrangement exists between the demanding Governments which would decide the preference either on account of the gravity of the offenses committed or for any other reason.

ARTICLE XI

All articles seized which were in the possession of the person to be surrendered at the time of his arrest, whether they are the proceeds of the crime or offense charged, or can be used as elements to establish the proof of the crime or offense, shall, so far as practicable, and if the competent authority of the State applied to orders the delivery thereof, be given up at the time the extradition is effected. Nevertheless, the rights of third parties with regard to the articles aforesaid shall be duly respected.

ARTICLE XII

The expenses occasioned by the arrest, examination and delivery of the persons claimed shall be borne by the Government requesting the extradition. However, such Government shall not have to bear any expense for the services of such public officers or functionaries of the Government from which extradition is sought as receive a fixed salary from the State. It is understood that the charge for the services of such public officers or functionaries as receive only fees or perquisites shall not exceed their customary fees for the acts or services performed by them had such acts or services been performed in ordinary criminal proceedings under the laws of the country of which the extradition is requested.

ARTICLE XIII

This treaty shall take effect in 30 days after the date of the exchange of ratifications, and shall not operate retroactively.

The ratifications of this treaty shall be exchanged at Monaco as soon as possible, and it shall continue to produce its effects for a period of six months after either of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice of its intention to terminate it.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the above articles both in English and French and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done, in duplicate, at Monaco, this fifteenth day of February, in the year nineteen hundred and thirty-nine.

PAUL C. SQUIRE. HENRY MAURAN.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is exactly in the form that has been followed during the last 2 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 16, 1939.

MY DEAR SENATOR PITTMAN: I should like to express my great personal interest in the Convention on Interchange of Publications, concluded at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace at Buenos Aires, which has been transmitted by the President to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratifi-

As you will recall, this convention was proposed to the Buenos Aires Conference by the United States delegation and was unanimously approved at that gathering by the representatives of the 21 American republics. It represents a significant advance step toward the achievement of that deeper inter-American understanding which we all consider of such paramount importance.

Although the printed page is one of the most valuable media for encouraging a greater appreciation abroad of the life and for encouraging a greater appreciation abroad of the life and thought of our country, the circulation of United States books in foreign countries has been hampered by unfavorable rates of exchange and by the relatively high cost of books published in this country, when compared with those of certain other nations. The interchange of publications, envisaged under this convention, will provide the means for breaking down existing barriers. It should contribute to a wider knowledge in the other American republics of the best contributions of our thinkers and writers and reciprocally to a similar wider knowledge in the United States of the most significant literary and scientific productions of the other American republics.

Favorable action by the Senate will open the way for this Department to take prompt steps toward initiating this mutually profitable exchange.

Sincerely yours,

SUMNER WELLES, Under Secretary. The Honorable Key PITTMAN, United States Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think that convention explains itself.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am not familiar with it, and I should like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was proposed that the Governments of the Latin American countries and the United States should exchange public documents, translated into Spanish and English, except with regard to Brazil. They were supposed to be documents with respect to government. The Committee on Appropriations has already provided the necessary appropriations for the exchange of the documents. That is all there is to this particular treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification, with the understanding, will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Execu-tive M. Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a convention on interchange of publications signed at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace at Buenos Aires on December 23, 1936, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and the respec tive plenipotentiaries of the other American republics, subject to the following understanding:

To carry out the provisions of article III, bilateral agreements may be entered into through exchanges of notes between the United States and the other governments parties to the convention setting forth the procedures to be followed, any modifications which may seem advisable in the number of copies of publications required to be exchanged under the said article, and the government agencies to be responsible for the delivery of the publications

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate agree to the resolution of ratification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the understanding to the resolution of ratification.

The understanding was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification with the understanding. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, with the understanding, is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

SWEDEN-DOUBLE TAXATION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are three other treaties which I am not going to ask to take up at this time. The next treaty is Executive K, a convention between the United States of America and Sweden for the avoidance of double taxation and the establishment of rules of reciprocal administrative assistance in the case of income and other taxation, signed at Washington on March 23, 1939.

I may say that the Foreign Relations Committee appointed the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] as a subcommittee to deal with that matter, because the Finance Committee has been considering the subject matter of the treaty for a long time. He finally made a favorable report to the Committee on Foreign Relations with regard to it. But I would not ask that it be taken up until he could make an explanation of it to the Senate. I know generally what the treaty means, but the Senator from Mississippi could answer any questions touching it much better than I, and, therefore, I will not ask that it be taken up for ratification.

LIABILITY WHEN COLLISIONS OCCUR BETWEEN VESSELS

So far as Calendar No. 4 is concerned, Executive K, that is an international convention for the unification of certain rules to govern the liability of vessels when collisions occur between them, and a protocol thereto, both signed at Brussels on September 23, 1910.

A subcommittee, of which the Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] is chairman, has been considering that matter for quite a while. Considerable evidence was taken on it. It is quite a technical question, and I will not attempt at this time to take the subject up, because I desire that the Senator from Washington and the members of the subcommittee shall discuss it with the Senate.

COPYRIGHT CONVENTION

There is a convention dealing with copyrights. Announcement was made this morning by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] that owing to circumstances which he then stated, he would not consider it advisable to attempt to take it up at this session of Congress.

I think that covers all the explanations necessary with regard to the treaties on the calendar.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Was it the Senator's purpose to take up Executive Calendar Nos. 6 and 7 at this time? I indicated to the Senator that I was opposed to those two conventions, but I have no desire to interpose objection to their consideration, and if I can have an opportunity to state the grounds of my objection to them, so far as I am concerned, I should be perfectly satisfied to have both conventions considered.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand the Senator has no objection at all to Calendar No. 7.

Mr. WHITE. I made a statement to the Senator to that effect a few days ago, I recall, but, as I have reflected over it, it seems to me the two conventions are somewhat interrelated, and I think they should stand together.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator desire to express his opinion in regard to them at this time?

Mr. WHITE. I had not assumed that the matter was coming up at the moment, and my thoughts are somewhat scattered. But I might be able to gather them together and state briefly my objections, if the Senator wants to go ahead with the consideration of those two conventions at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an observation?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Unless the Senator is eager to have his statement in the Record for study, I make the suggestion that I would not feel like proceeding without a quorum call if he should object to these two conventions. So I suggest that they go over.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Nevada will not insist, under those circumstances. The Senator from Nevada is sure that the Senator from Maine has very material objections to make, and they probably will be of very great value. I think it is probably better, under the circumstances, that we postpone consideration of the conventions until tomorrow or perhaps the next day. I think it is well, however, that the Senate should act one way or the other upon these two conventions.

Mr. WHITE. I think, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I could say all I wanted to say about these two radio conventions in 10 minutes. I am perfectly willing to undertake to do it now, or to let it go over until there is a larger attendance in the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Vermont, I think it is very well to let them go over, with the understanding that there will be no delay and that we will act on them.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, August 2, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art found by those who truly seek Thee, known by those who love, and seen by all whose hearts are pure, we desire to begin, to continue, and to end this day with Thee.

We pray that all the barriers that separate us from Thee and our fellowmen may be submerged by a renewed love and consecration, and that every thought of our mind may be brought into obedience to the spirit of the Christ.

Wilt Thou lift upon us the light of Thy countenance so that it may be a day of unclouded vision. May we give ourselves unreservedly to the Great Companion of our souls who is too wise to err and too kind to injure.

In His name we pray, whose will is our peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 281) entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I delivered at the exercises held at the John Ericson statue in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., July 31, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. Pierce of Oregon addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

NEW SOURCES OF TAXES

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, it will be distressing news to the American people to learn that yesterday a new "sweeping investigation" into the Federal revenue structure was arranged by a special House Ways and Means subcommittee. For what reason and for what purpose, listen to this:

To search for new sources to tax to help raise money to pay growing costs of government.

I say that it will be sad and distressing news to the thrifty, hard-working American people to learn that and know at the same time that their Congress has done nothing of late years to reduce the cost of government; and we are asked to consider today another bill, the lending and spending bill of the President, which will plunge this Nation deeper into debt in the sum of $2,000,000,000. The committee will have to find ways, if this bill passes, to further tax and burden the people to pay that back, together with the colossal sum of more than $40,000,000,000 now burdening the American people.

The power to lend this money is inseparable from the power to buy political support. This means more centralization of power in Washington. The purse strings in the hands of a paternal government is the lash to whip the people into submission and obedience.

We are asked to do this in the face of the fact that we are now borrowing 39 cents out of every dollar expended by the Federal Government and taking 23 cents out of every dollar received by the wage earner of the country in taxes.

Lord Bryce, with a degree of pride in his work, when he wrote The American Commonwealth, pointed out that in 1880 only 1 person out of 652 received public aid. Today one person out of every six is feeding at the public trough, under a policy of government that believes in wasting what a thrifty nation amassed by free enterprise. Public credit will collapse some day, and that day may be near at hand, and the present trend is bringing it nearer with accelerating speed.

We have doubled our public debt since 1932. National expenditures have reached dizzy heights, Federal deficits are progressively increasing, and the lending-spending bill would hasten and increase it. The use of the people's money means the purchasing of the electorate, and that means the end of our Republic.

The time has come to stop wasting the people's money. UNITED STATES HOUSING RILL

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am leaving tonight with a group of other delegates to attend the Interparliamentary Union. Before going, I want to express the hope that the House will defeat the Senate-approved United States Housing Authority bill which will drain the United States Treasury of some $2,700,000,000 over the next 60 years in the way of outright grants for rent subsidies on slum-clearance projects in the metropolitan areas. If this bill and the spend-lend measure are defeated, it will raise the prestige of the House and help to restore confidence in the future financial stability of this Government and will encourage private industry to employ its idle cash and our idle men.

The Federal Government cannot continue indefinitely to spend $10,000,000 a day more than its revenues without eventually facing bankruptcy. Let us strive for more business in government and less government in busines. We cannot afford to sacrifice future security for immediate benefits.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MANUFACTURE OF FERTILIZER PHOSPHATES BY T. V. A.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to follow the gentleman who just addressed the House [Mr. Coffee of Nebraska], for I would like to call attention to an appropriation that the New Deal jammed through Congress of $450,000 for a T. V. A. plant, manufacturing fertilizer phosphates, in spite of the fact that there are 191 private companies in the United States capable of producing 8,840,000 tons of those phosphates, which is more than twice the amount consumed in our Nation in any one year. On the one hand, we kill the goose that laid the golden egg, and on the other hand we spend time here discussing a spending-lending program, allegedly to revive business. This sort of procedure passeth all understanding. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a letter I have written to the chairman of the Temporary Economic Committee

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include excerpts from Senate Document No. 14, and excerpts from publications substantiating my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a statement made by the Medical Society of the State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, just a little over a year ago the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which I am a member, reported, and the Congress passed, the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. That act created the Civil Aeronautics Authority and transferred to it the personnel and property of the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce and the Bureau of Air Mail of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Under the act the Authority is charged, among other things, with the regulation, promotion, development, and inspection of air transport and its attendant facilities and the operation of many navigation aids. In my opinion, the Authority has done a good job during the first year of its existence

Recently it was charged on the floor that the Authority has 3,600 employees to regulate 4,724 office workers of the American air lines. Similar statements have been made on other occasions. In order to keep the record straight, may I suggest that I have before me the official figures supplied by Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transport Association. Colonel Gorrell states that the Civil Aeronautics Authority has 560 employees engaged in regulating not only all of the domestic and international air lines, but also all the aviation schools, all aircraft manufacturers, and all of the aviation mechanics and pilots in the United States. Colonel Gorrell states:

To suggest that with this relative handful the Authority is over-staffed is unthinkable.

Colonel Gorrell points out that the remainder of the employees of the Civil Aeronautics Authority are not engaged in regulatory work at all but, like the employees in the Lighthouse Service, are engaged in the purely executive and non-regulatory work of operating the air beacons, air traffic-control towers, and other navigation facilities which serve not only the air lines but also all private flyers and the Air Corps of the United States Army and the naval air service.

Colonel Gorrell further points out that the Civil Aeronautics Authority has actually 560 employees engaged in regulatory work, as compared with the 2,599 regulatory employees of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has 2,662 employees operating the beacon lights, the traffic-control towers, and the radio range stations of the airways, as against the 5,017 employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses, which performs a similar operating function. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an article which appeared in the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HON. JOSEPH TAGGART

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, two former Members of Congress from the Second District of Kansas passed away since the adjournment of the Seventy-fifth Congress. The first was Hon. Charles F. Scott, and soon after Hon. Joseph Taggart. After threescore years and ten of eventful life, Joseph Taggart passed to the Great Beyond.

Joseph Taggart was a colorful figure in official life for a number of years as county attorney and as Congressman from the Second District of Kansas. Besides being a public official, Mr. Taggart was a teacher for many years in the public schools of Wyandotte County, where he made an enviable record of public service.

Mr. Taggart had a very alert and brilliant mind, and, true to his Celtic ancestry, his tongue was touched with the fire of eloquence and sparkling wit. Many of his witticisms will long survive in the memory of his associates whom he was wont to entertain in idle moments between the more serious matters of life.

As county attorney of Wyandotte County for several terms, he attained a place in the roster of prosecutors that was seldom surpassed and not often equaled. In the 5 or 6 years he was prosecutor of Wyandotte County he achieved a wide reputation as a relentless prosecutor. Some of the cases he prosecuted became nationally known—notably a case of poisoning which was widely discussed and in which Mr. Taggart secured a conviction.

Mr. Taggart was a profound student of history and philosophy as well as of letters, which rendered him a most interesting and entertaining conversationalist. He was first elected to Congress on November 7, 1911, to fill out the unexpired term of Hon. A. C. Mitchell, who was elected in November 1910, but who died about 4 months after he took the oath of office, on March 4, 1911. Mr. Taggart was reelected in 1912 and in 1914, being succeeded in 1916 by Hon. E. C. Little.

Mr. Taggart was a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, where, by his knowledge of the law, he attained a high place in the regard of the members of that great committee. The chairman, Mr. Sumners of Texas, is the only man now left on that committee who served with Mr. Taggart, and who remembers his valuable service there. While his service was comparatively brief in the House, he made himself felt and highly respected for his intellectual attainments, native wit, and ready repartee.

Mr. Taggart was a devoted Democrat and believed in the political philosophy of Thomas Jefferson, but never subscribed to the New Deal, and in recent years broke with the more radical leadership of his party.

Mr. Taggart had the faculty of making friends, who have been saddened by his death. They will always remember him for his brilliant mind, scintillating wit, and generous impulses. He served with the rank of captain in the Quartermaster Corps in the World War and since then occupied places of trust and honor in the Veterans' Bureau, Department of the Interior, and as judge of the Court of Industrial Relations in Kansas. In all these positions Mr. Taggart served with distinction and credit to himself. He leaves to his widow and children an honored name and the memory of a useful and eventful career.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein an address I delivered in Indianapolis on June 24.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission for the gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed] to extend his remarks by publishing a report from the conference committee on national debt policy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a letter from one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN L. LEWIS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PAGE MR. MURPHY AND THE SENATE CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I notice the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], who the other day said I had an attack of "Lewisitis." That is becoming epidemic the country over.

Not so long ago Attorney General Murphy announced the organization of a new unit in the Department of Justice to investigate the denial of civil liberties. He and the Senate Civil Liberties Committee have long been on the trail of employers who thought they had a right to give men jobs and pay them wages.

Yesterday's press carries the news that 3,000 pickets fought Cleveland police and firemen who were endeavoring to open the way so that men might go to and from their work.

Attorney General Murphy's attention is called to a statement of Mr. Joseph Bagano, strike leader, who predicted more fighting during the afternoon when nonstrikers inside the plants came off duty. His prediction was fulfilled. He knew what he intended to do, and he did it; more than 40 men were sent to the hospital.

According to the press Mr. Bagano said:

We will continue to throw stones, turn over cars, and resist these "scabs" until they get religion and stay home where they belong.

He made good his threat, cars were overturned, windows were broken, and there was fighting all along the line.

John L. Lewis is the big boss who directs the activities of Bagano and his associates. Lewis is Murphy's friend. Murphy is Lewis' friend, together they kept the sit-down strikes going in Michigan for 44 days; a record for loss of wages, destruction of property, and denial of civil liberty. If Murphy does not want to stand convicted before the Nation at large of being a hyprocrite, one who winks at and ignores the wholesale violation of civil liberties, let him get busy with his new division in his Department of Justice, restore civil liberties to those men of Cleveland who want to exercise their constitutional right to work.

The press carries the information that one of the strike leaders was appealing to Murphy to prevent the police from interfering with the strikers who were obstructing the streets and preventing men from working. Murphy did as Governor aid Lewis in violating the law in the Michigan strikes, but if he as Attorney General aids the C. I. O. in clubbing the police of Cleveland into submission and aids in preventing men going about their daily tasks, he should be impeached.

Bagano and his associates are inciting to riot, throwing stones, breaking windows, sending people to the hospital with bodily injuries. These are criminal acts and the authorities would do well to bring criminal charges against the ring leaders—Lewis, Bagano, and their associates—who boss the job and incite others to violence.

As Raymond Clapper, always friendly with the New Deal, advised some time ago: Let Murphy, the administration's glamor boy, get off his airplanes, quit traveling around the country, "forget the ballyhoo and knuckle down to work." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman] loves to address me, and I welcome it; but I want to say to him that I have not heard Mr. Lewis make the statement, and I do not believe everything I read in the Republican newspapers. Personally, I feel that not all of the people all of the time agree with Mr. Lewis. I do not want to say that I have at all times agreed with what he has said. Nevertheless, he represents the cause of certain heretofore unorganized labor, and I hope that within a short space of time he will be able to merge his organization with the American Federation of Labor, and they will then have a real organization that the gentleman from Michigan will not be able or willing to assail and attack as he has.

As to Attorney General Murphy, he does not need any defense at my hands, and I am satisfied he is a pretty good man. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

[Mr. Allen of Illinois addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record at this point, and to include an editorial from the Chicago Tribune on the subject of hogs and lard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the gentleman's request to extend his remarks at this point.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, to include certain extraneous matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein certain newspaper excerpts from Argentine papers and certain statistical figures from the department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to incorporate therein a copy of a radio address made by myself last Saturday evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the Customs Service, which was established 150 years ago today, on August 1, 1789.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter received by me from Chairman John H. Fahey, of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it did me a lot of good this morning to hear so many speeches, some of them coming from the Democratic side of the House, saying that we cannot go on with this enormous spending program this administration has started and expect this country to survive. When I heard the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Coffee] a few moments ago on the Democratic side of the House start talking economy it certainly did my heart good. I hope more Members from that side of the House will plead for economy in government. We must have it if we are to save this Nation of ours and protect the Treasury. We should vote right today on the spending, squandering bill. Let us see that we do vote economy today.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Speaker and the majority leader will come out now and publicly advocate economy. [Applause.1

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want the RECORD to show sometime, by votes, how the gentleman from Pennsylvania stands on expenditures and not so much conversation, because conversation does not mean a thing, but the record of votes proves action. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman will look at the votes, for he will find me voting for economy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a speech delivered by Judge Davenport at Goliad, Tex., at the unveiling of a monument and the dedication of a park celebrating the downfall of Goliad in the war of Texas independence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-one Members are present, not a

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

LIABILITY OF RAILROADS TO THEIR EMPLOYEES

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1708) to amend the Employers' Liability Act, and I shall offer an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the provisions of H. R. 4988, which was passed by the House yesterday.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this bill passed the House yesterday and a Senate bill was passed by the Senate. There is a little difference between the two bills. The purpose of this procedure is to make the parliamentary situation such that the bill may go to conference.

Mr. CELLER. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. It is a very meritorious bill and should go to conference.

Mr. WALTER. The Senate bill contains the provisions of a bill that our committee unanimously reported yesterday, and it can be incorporated in this measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1, 4, and 6, chapter 149 (35 Stat. 65, act of April 22, 1908), are hereby amended so as to read as follows: "Section 1. That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories, or between any of the States and Territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her permerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

assumed the risks of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statue enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee. "Sec. 6. That no action shall be maintained under this act unless applicability thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.'

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Celler: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and insert the following: "That section 1 of the act entitled 'An act relating to the liability "That section 1 of the act entitled 'An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases,' approved April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. 65; U. S. C., title 45, sec. 51), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories, or between any of the States and Territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and sentative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment. In any action brought against any common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for injuries to, or the death of, any of its employees, such employee shall not be held to have assumed the risks of his employment in any case where said employee has not had actual notice of any negligently maintained condition or practice where the negligence of such common carrier, its officers, agents, or employees, proximately contributed carrier, its officers, agents, or employees, proximately contributed to the injury or death of such employees except those risks incident to the employment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION AND FINANCING OF SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 286 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 286

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7120, a bill to provide for the construction and financing of self-liquidating projects, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 5 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currence, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. My understanding is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is to make a point of order against the rule on another question from what I have in mind and I wish to preserve his right to do that.

The SPEAKER. Upon what proposition?

Mr. MAPES. I say my understanding is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is to make a point of order against the rule on another question.

The SPEAKER. On the rule now pending?

Mr. MAPES. Yes. I desire to preserve his rights, but for the protection of the Committee on Rules I think I should call attention to the fact that this rule is reported by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Michigan now making a point of order against the resolution?

Mr. MAPES. I make a point of order for the purpose really of submitting a parliamentary inquiry to the Speaker. Frankly, I do not care to press the point of order, but I desire to call attention to the matter. I knew there was no member of the Committee on Rules who was enthusiastic about this rule or the legislation.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman submit his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MAPES. But I did not know there was no member who was willing to attach his name to the report of the committee. May I ask the Speaker if it is proper procedure, or parliamentary, for a Member of the House not a member of the Rules Committee to report a rule from the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule on the parliamentary inquiry.

The attention of the Chair has been called to this matter. It appears from the print of the resolution that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], of the Committee on Rules, reported the resolution. The record shows, however, that the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. Sabath] did, as a matter of fact, report the rule. It is evident to the Chair that the incorporation of the name "Mr. STEAGALL" was a clerical or typographical error, and the Chair would so hold if a point of order were made against it.

Mr. MAPES. I think the Speaker's decision is correct, but I felt the attention of the House should be called to the error.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against certain sections of the bill referred to in the rule.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to make a point of order against the resolution?

Mr. TABER. Against certain sections of the bill referred to in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not entertain that point of order, because the matter now pending before the House is whether or not it should agree to the resolution making a certain bill in order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to certain precedents on this matter.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, no part of the bill is now before the House. The question now is on the adoption of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has asked the indulgence of the Chair to present precedents upon the point of order he offers to raise against the bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, the consideration of which the pending rule proposes to make in order.

Mr. TABER. The point of order is against certain sections of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that under the rule, line 6, all points of order against the bill are waived. If the rule should be adopted, it would be impossible to make these points of order.

I wish to call attention to paragraph 2142 in volume 7 of Cannon's Precedents, 1936, page 884. There on a Calendar Wednesday, without the bill having been read for amendment and without there having been general debate, after the bill was called up—and the calling up of this resolution is equivalent to the calling up of the bill—a point of order was raised against the bill. The point of order was overruled. Thereupon Mr. Newton made a point of order against the particular items of appropriation in the bill without the bill having been read for amendment, or anything of that kind, and the Speaker sustained the point of order. This appears on page 3664 of the Congressional Record, fourth session, Sixty-seventh Congress.

A similar situation arose during the consideration of a bill from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. There a point of order was raised during general debate without the bill having been read for amendment. This appears on page 891 of the same volume—7 Cannon's Precedents, section 2148—with reference to a bill providing for the payment of certain funds out of appropriations already made for motor-vehicle service.

These situations are exactly like the situation that is presented here. I desire at this time to make a point of order against certain sections in the bill it is proposed to take up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

The Chair has no disposition to limit the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], but the Chair is very clearly of the opinion that the points of order the gentleman seeks to raise against certain provisions of the bill are not in order at this time. The House is now considering a resolution providing for the consideration of the bill against which the gentleman desires to raise certain points of order. The resolution which is now being considered itself provides, if adopted, that all points of order against the bill are waived. This is no innovation or new matter. Time after time the Committee on Rules has brought to the House resolutions waiving points of order against bills. Under the general rules of the House, the Chair will say to the gentleman, aside from the considerations which the Chair has mentioned, points of order cannot be raised against the bill until the section is reached in the bill which attempts to make appropriations and against which the point of order is desired to be made.

For those reasons the Chair does not feel like recognizing the gentleman at this juncture to state points of order against the proposed bill.

Mr. TABER. May I call the attention of the Chair to the last sentence in clause 4 of rule XXI:

A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

There have been decisions holding that the point of order would not lie to the bill or to its consideration, but I have cited to the Chair cases where such points of order have been made and have been sustained when the bill itself was not under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has undertaken to make it plain that the Chair's decision is based very largely upon the proposition that the resolution now being considered specifically waives all points of order that may be made against the bill, and includes those matters evidently against which the gentleman has in mind in making points of order.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SABATH. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have observed that the resolution has been reported by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Steagall].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, we have already been over that matter. Another gentleman on that side brought up the point.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SABATH. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, is the effect of the Speaker's ruling that the only remedy then would be to beat the rule?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter not for the Speaker to decide but for the House itself to decide.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I assume the gentleman from Michigan desires some time, so I yield him the usual 30 minutes, which I feel he is not going to use.

Mr. MAPES. Our distinguished chairman is very courteous. I may say to the chairman that I would like a little time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I hope you will all bear with me today. I have had a hard siege of it. I am not going to detain you long, and I hope you will give me the attention to which I feel I am entitled while I explain the need for this rule.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I can do better than to restate at the very beginning that this rule is a broad, open, and liberal one. It provides for 5 hours of general debate, and that after the general debate, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. I personally believe that the title of the bill itself concisely and accurately explains the purpose of the proposed legislation. It states:

That this act may be cited as the "Self-Liquidating Project Act of 1939."

SEC. 2. In order to provide a sound method of financing which, without burdening the national taxing power, will make it possible to increase employment through a self-liquidating improvement program the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (herein called the "Corporation"), upon the direction of the President, shall issue from time to time notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to enable the Department of Agriculture, the Public Roads Administration, the Public Works Administration, the Rural Electrification Administration, and the Corporation to carry out their respective functions as herein provided.

This short paragraph, Mr. Speaker, explains the purpose of this important legislation. The bill authorizes $350,000,-000 for public-works loans to municipalities and States for construction of schools, hospitals, and other improvements necessary and badly needed.

It authorizes $250,000,000 to the R. F. C. for railroad equipment on a 10-year basis,

It authorizes $350,000,000 for rural electrification.

It authorizes $400,000,000 under which the Department of Agriculture may provide for rural rehabilitation, farm tenancy loans, and, in general, aid and assist the tenants and the farmers of this Nation.

It authorizes $500,000,000 for public roads, of which $230,-000,000 is to be temporarily advanced to the States to enable them to match the amounts required for the allocations granted them.

In addition, there is a provision which authorizes an additional $100,000,000 for the Export-Import Bank.

All these authorizations for loans will not be a burden on the Government. They are all for self-liquidating projects, and after a careful investigation and examination I am satisfied that most of this money will be repaid to the Government.

Those who charge that the Government will sustain a loss in advancing this money are deliberately and willfully overlooking the fact that all these loans are to be amply secured. There can be hardly any loss. And even conceding that some losses may result from R. F. C. loans that have been made in the past, it is well to remember that those were loans which were approved and made during the Republican administration. In the present bill it is provided that loans made to the railroads will be secured by the Government retaining title to the equipment purchased by means of such loans. The $230,000,000 loan for highways will be deducted from the amounts regularly allocated to the respective States that are not able at the present time to match the amounts the Government puts up for such purposes.

The bill provides that the Government shall charge onehalf percent above the interest it will pay on this money, and if there should be some few losses that one-half percent should take care of them. However, even if there should be a few losses, the great benefits that will accrue to millions of Americans will more than offset them.

Therefore I am amazed, Mr. Speaker, at the reckless statements of the gentlemen on the left side. I am surprised that gentlemen opposing for political reasons this needed legislation which will create over 500,000 jobs, should be guilty of misstatement and, in fact, misrepresentations about what this bill will accomplish.

This does not mean a great deal to my district directly, and if I should personally be called upon to give a title to the bill I would call it an agricultural aid and relief bill for the aid and assistance of the rural sections of our country. No bill that I can recall during all the long years that I have had the honor to serve here has tended to do more for the rural sections of our country than this bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman care to yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is amazingly frank in his statement that the bill is an agricultural relief bill, but does the gentleman think that the program originally sent down to the Congress was contemplated as an agricultural relief proposal?

Mr. SABATH. Well, unfortunately, I am obliged to admit that certain forces at work in this House, as well as in the other body, utilize every opportunity to eliminate from any proposed legislation all benefits to the urban population or for the unemployed of the cities. I still feel, notwithstanding that it is a farmer and rural section relief bill, eventually the people in the cities will derive some benefit because of the employment that this legislation will create.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now, please.

Mr. BARDEN. We do not want to fuss with the gentleman, but we do want a little information.

Mr. SABATH. I will give that to the gentleman later on, if I can. Mr. Speaker, this morning in the Well here we heard from two or three gentlemen; unfortunately, disgruntled Democrats complaining of our expenditures and about the conditions in our Nation. To them I desire to say this. Yes, we have appropriated money, although we are not appropriating any in this bill, and we have also expended money in the interest of the people and not in the interest of any Member or anyone connected with the administration. All these moneys that have been appropriated were in the interest of America and for the unemployed, for American business and American institutions. The result, I am proud to say, is-and these figures cannot be contradicted-that due to our spending, the American people today have in the banks of the United States, which includes the national and State banks, over $43,000,000,000 of deposits. Over $53,000,000,000 of deposits in the banks of the United States. Twenty-three billion, three hundred and forty million in the national banks, and in other banks, $30,472,national and State banks, over $53,000,000,000 of deposits. but I repeat, $54,000,000,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Can the gentleman inform the House what part of that $53,000,000,000 is represented by the deposits of one bank in another bank?

Mr. SABATH. That is not included. If I had included what the gentleman believes is included, the amount would have been $62,000,000,000, but I have eliminated that, and only after careful research I came to the conclusion that the amount of $54,000,000,000 is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. Later on, not now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But at this point. Mr. SABATH. Not at this point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SABATH. Notwithstanding the fact that these billions are deposited in our banks, that the vaults of the banks are bulging with currency, with money, the bankers of this country have refused and are refusing to come to the rescue of business or agriculture or anyone. They are keeping the money locked up. For what reasons I do not know, but it is for that purpose that this Government is obliged to aid industry and help business and help the farmers, because the bankers, controlled from Wall Street, have refused and are refusing to do so. I feel that that in itself is positive evidence that the spending on the part of this administration, by this Congress, was in the right direction, was constructive, and, Mr. Speaker, that should be constantly borne in mind by fair-minded persons who recognize results instead of political speeches.

Mr. Speaker and you gentlemen, do you not know that the income of the United States in 1932 was $40,000,000,000? In 1933 it was $42,000,000,000, and in the year 1939 it is estimated it will be $68,000,000,000.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Not now, as I am giving the House and the country information willfully withheld from them.

Mr. Speaker, the income to the people of the United States under President Roosevelt's Democratic administration has increased in 6 years by $28,000,000,000, and only the day before yesterday I read in the Evening Star newspaper of Washington a statement showing that the increases continue and that the national income is growing daily. Surely no one will charge the Washington Star, or any other paper in this city, with being Democratic and printing any false propaganda in the interest of President Roosevelt's policy, or the New Deal.

Please understand, and I am extremely anxious that the country should know, that the annual national income or the yearly national income-I want to make it as plain as I can—is $28,000,000,000 higher per year than it was in 1932. And, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that by the end of 1939 there will be shown a thirty billion increase. Thus if you Republicans had the interest of the country at heart and would not retard the President's efforts and our efforts it will be increased in 1940 to thirty-five billions, and before the President's term will expire it will reach nearly eighty billions, which will be more than double the national income in 1932. So when you talk of spending and talk of increased bonded indebtedness won't you please at some time be honest and fair and admit that our annual or yearly income is greater than the total increased debt during the 6 years of Roosevelt's administration. In other words, we have increased our debt by a total of only about $20,000,000,000, yet are increasing our income—that is each year—by $30,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, now I am going to ask some of the financiers on the Republican side and some of the expert Democrat economists: Would you not be willing to borrow $20,000,000,-000 if by so doing you could increase your wealth by $30,000,-000,000 every year? I ask you—answer it if you can—is not that good business for the American people? To make it clear so that the most uninformed person may understandwould you not be willing to invest $20 if that $20 would bring back to you every year not 6 percent or 8 percent, but 100 percent and 150 percent? Why do you not tell that to the people? Why do not your Republican newspapers bring that home to the people? Why do you not show them the truth, that the Democratic investment of $20,000,000,000 in the welfare of America has increased national income to a new record high point? Why not give them the facts, instead of repeating like a Charlie McCarthy the whines and complaints of big tax dodgers and millionaires?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I am sorry, but I cannot. Maybe later on. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the spending and the expenditure made were no doubt incurred in the interest of the American people, in the interest of our country. I am not at this time going back to describe to you the conditions in 1932 when President Roosevelt was elected, nor the conditions in '33 when he was sworn in as President. I know you remember the unfortunate conditions, but the Republican leadership wants to forget those desperate days, and consequently they are obliged to coin new words, new sentences, new paragraphs, to give to the Republican newspapers an opportunity for new headlines. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if the Republican press, and if the Republicans here would be sincere with the people of the United States, if they honestly desired to improve conditions and reemploy the people who have been unfortunately thrown out of employment on account of their own destructive misrule, they would be then serving a righteous cause, and they would be placed in the position of real statesmen, men who place the interest and welfare of our country above politics and their own political and personal fortunes.

The vote of every Democrat, regardless of whether he hales from the North or the South, the East or the West, elected on the Democratic ticket, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, should be for this bill. I do not expect a single vote from the Republicans. They are not accustomed to vote in the interest of the common people. They promise the farmer and the laboring people everything before election. They pledge themselves to vote for legislation in the interest of the people, but when the time comes they vote against it as they always have done before. It is because of these tactics that they were properly driven from office in 1932 and will be kept out of office so long as Democrats stand by and support the honest efforts of President Roosevelt. If you Republicans and some reactionary Democrats think you can discourage the President in his determined efforts to improve the conditions of the underprivileged, the farmer, the wage earner, and honest businessmen, you have another guess coming. Your opposition is a stimulant to him, and he will, yes, he must continue the fight of the people and for the people. He has embarked on the path of making America a better place to live in for Americans and the people will continue to give him their overwhelming support in his efforts. You may delay and obstruct his great program, but you will not and cannot stop it, for the people will not be fooled. They will stop your obstruction and sabotage of his great liberal program when you face them at the polls next year.

Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, I cannot help to express my condemnation, and I feel you must feel as I do when you have seen men in despair and on the verge of bankruptcy and ruin, who, after being saved by the New Deal and reestablished, and who are now deriving a greater income than in the balmy days of 1928 and early 1929, will find fault and condemn the very man who put them on their

I feel that this legislation is of such importance that it is not necessary to dwell any longer on the provisions of the bill. I have here a short résumé from the hearings in the other body, as well as the hearings in this body, showing the benefits that will accrue to our industries. While these benefits primarily are directed to the rural areas of the country, eventually the wage earners in the city will also derive at least indirect benefit from this legislation. I have it on good authority, Mr. Speaker, that this program and this policy, when it goes into effect, will bring reemployment of at least 500,000 men directly, and very likely an additional half million indirectly. In view of that fact, if gentlemen are desirous of reducing the funds for the relief of the American people which the special interests complain about so much, and especially the big boys who have made more money in 1938 and are making more in 1939 than ever before in the history of America, then I say to you that our duty is plain. You should disregard the objections that these big profiteers and tax evaders are using to mislead you. I feel this legislation should receive the approval of every sincere and honest American legislator. There should be no politics in this House about reemploying 1,000,000 men. There should be no politics in relieving and saving perhaps 250,000 farmers who are about to lose their farms, because under this bill it is intended to save the farmers who are about to be evicted from their farms, where already foreclosure proceedings have been commenced or at least threatened. In view of those facts I hope the resolution will receive the vote and support of all those honestly and sincerely trying to restore the prosperity of America. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I can see two sides to most legislative questions, but, frankly, I cannot see any justification whatever for this legislation at this time. I can see how it would be very dangerous at any time, but it is both dangerous and useless at this time. If there is any public demand for it, if there is any need for it, or if there is any reasonable justification for it, it was not disclosed at the hearings before the Committee on Rules. In fact, it was affirmatively shown at those hearings that there is no public demand for it, that there is really no need for it, and that there is no reasonable justification for it.

Briefly, the bill proposes to give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authority to issue and sell its bonds or securities to an additional amount of $1,850,000,000 above what it is now authorized to do, and to allocate the money thus obtained to certain governmental agencies already provided under the regular appropriations with all the money they need or can use efficiently. The bill covers a wide field. The different subjects covered by it for the most part have been considered for years, and intensively so, by standing committees of the House having jurisdiction of them, other than the Committee on Banking and Currency, which reports this bill, and in many instances these committees have refused to report legislation such as is contained in this bill.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported the Lea transportation bill a few weeks ago, after consideration by that committee for 6 months. was criticism by the opponents of that legislation because it was brought on the floor so late in the session. It covered only one subject, namely, transportation, a subject over which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction under the rules and to which it gives constant attention and study. This bill, which contains many subjects of equal or greater importance, was reported to the House of Representatives on July 31, 1939, according to the committee print, and it is now exactly 1:30 p. m., August 1, 1939. The rule was reported last night by the Committee on Rules at 5:45 p. m. At that time the committee substitute had not been printed. The committee report was not before the Committee on Rules. My office tried this morning every few minutes, beginning at 8:45, to get a printed copy of the report of the committee, and to get a printed copy of the committee substitute, but did not succeed in doing so until 10:30 o'clock. That is as long as anyone has had to study the bill and the report.

A copy of the hearings before the committee was delivered to me after I came on the floor this afternoon. We are asked to consider this legislation, under these conditions, legislation over which other committees naturally have jurisdiction and to which they have given consideration for years

Why do I say that the legislation is not needed? Because the hearings before the Committee on Rules disclosed that practically all, if not all, of the governmental agencies that will be assigned the money that is secured from the sale of these additional securities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation already have surpluses at their disposal given them under the regular appropriation laws. That is true of the Rural Electrification Administration. That is true of the Bureau of Roads. It is true of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as far as making loans to railroads is concerned. I think it is true of the other governmental agencies involved also.

Now, what does this bill propose to do? It proposes to give these agencies that already have more than they can make efficient use of under the regular appropriations of the Congress, this additional money and say to them, "Here it is. Spend it. Waste it." [Applause.]

I call the attention of the Members of the different committees to some of the things that are in this bill over which their committees have jurisdiction. To repeat, the bill authorizes the raising of $1,850,000,000. I see some members of the Committee on Appropriations here. Let them ponder this provision:

Departments, administrations, and agencies for which funds shall be provided by the Corporation, pursuant to this act—

Namely, $1,850,000,000-

may use such funds for the purposes of carrying out their respective functions under this act without further appropriations, and such funds shall be continuously available for such purposes.

I call the attention of the Committee on Agriculture to the farm-tenancy provision of the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to use $400,000,000 of the funds for that purpose. My understanding is that the Committee on Agriculture has refused to vote out a bill incorporating a similar provision.

I call the attention of the Committee on Agriculture to the further provision which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to refinance farm mortgages on which payments periodically due, exceed the normal farm income available for debt service. That is nearly all-inclusive. That is entirely new. It is a radical departure from any existing law. Still, it is here. We are obliged to pass on it without having a chance to read the bill or the hearings or the committee report. It has never been recommended by the Committee on Agriculture.

Now, coming to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, this bill authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to raise $250,000,000 to buy railroad equipment and to rent or lease that equipment to the railroads. The provision on this subject reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House is a little different, but not materially so, from the one discussed in the Senate, and it was stated there that it was proposed by it to put the Government into the junk business.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MAPES. I cannot yield now. I do not have the time.
Mr. Pelley, who is president of the Association of American Railroads, according to the proceedings in the Senate, said there was no need of any such provision.

I asked some of the witnesses before the Committee on Rules who recommended the provision, and I was unable to find that anybody recommended it. The railroads can get money more easily for equipment than for anything else. Besides, they do not need additional equipment; they have more equipment now than they can make use of. What the railroads need is business; yet here is a provision inserted in this bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, a committee that has no jurisdiction of the subject matter, authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to buy additional equipment for them. Let me read from the Record what the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate said in regard to this matter. On page 10336 of the Record, Senator Wheeler said this:

The Committee on Interstate Commerce has studied this problem of railroad finance for the last 2 or 3 years. There was never the slightest intimation of this proposal brought to the attention of any member of our committee. We were never consulted about it in any way, shape, or form; and I am sure that every member of the committee who knows anything about it would have been unanimous against a proposition of this kind.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want it emphatically presented here that this is the lay-out: I am sure the railroads can borrow money of the R. F. C. for equipment. Is it not true that under this bill the R. F. C. will buy the junk and then can turn around after they get title and sell it to the railroads on a lease proposition to buy better railroad equipment and leave the junk by the readside?

Mr. MAPES. I tried to make that clear.

Mr. GIFFORD. It must be made clear.

Mr. MAPES. In substance what the gentleman has stated is correct.

If anybody questions the self-liquidating feature of the projects proposed, let him turn to the first section of the bill. That should allay any doubts he may have on that score—

This act may be cited as a self-liquidating projects act of 1939.

In other words, it must be so, because it is so declared by the drafters of the bill. Here is the way this self-liquidating matter works as far as the item for highway purposes is concerned: The Bureau of Roads now has $228,000,000 available under the regular appropriations for the States which they have been unable to match. How does this bill propose to collect $230,000,000 of the amount that is appropriated for the Bureau of Roads? It proposes to advance to these States that have been unable to match the Federal contribution in the way of grants or loans, or gifts, $230,000,000, so that they can match this $228,000,000 that the Bureau of Roads now has. How is that to be paid back? It is to be paid back in this way: When Congress in the years to come makes appropriations for roads it is proposed that it will deduct one-tenth of the appropriation which would otherwise go to these States and apply that on the loan.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

As I said before the Committee on Rules, it is like a father who gives his son a weekly allowance of $10. The boy comes to him and says: "Dad, I have got to have $100 this week; won't you lend it to me and take $5 out of my allowance for the next 20 weeks until it is paid back?" That is the way it is self-liquidating, as a member of the Committee on Rules retorted: "Yes, and when the time comes, Dad comes across with the same $10 a week." When the time comes Congress will appropriate the same amount to these States that it appropriates to the other States and everybody in this House who has had any experience here knows that is exactly what will be done. Still this is called a self-liquidating measure.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this bill is dangerous from any standpoint, and there is no necessity for it because most, if not all, of the agencies involved already have more money than they can use efficiently. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, it will be a sad day for our country if this Congress divides on party lines when the issues under consideration are primarily economic issues.

Being sound is no test of being a Democrat; being sound is no test of being a Republican. When we face an economic issue there should be but one question before us: Is it sound? Is it for the public welfare? If so, let support come from both sides of the aisle. [Applause.] But if it be unsound let no one try to question the man's party allegiance or loyalty because he dare raise his voice against it.

I went this morning to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules and asked for the privilege of speaking on this resolution and frankly said: "To speak against it." He said, "No Democrat will get time from me to speak against this resolution. If you want time go to the Republicans"; and that is where I went, to the Republicans, and I now express my appreciation of their courtesy in permitting me to express my views.

I do not propose to go into the items of expenditure in this bill.

I am willing to concede for the sake of argument that they may be desirable and that this fund will be efficiently, wisely, justly, and fairly handled. I am willing to concede that the purpose behind those who are sponsoring the bill is to promote the general welfare. But may I say that I do not agree with the theory of John Maynard Keynes, who, being unable to sell his own government on the idea of spending for recovery, came over and sold some of our officials on that theory, notably the distinguished chairman of our Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Eccles,

What do we have before us? We can debate the rule on this bill until September and we will not develop any real new facts, nor will we change any votes. This rule ought to be defeated and we should end the argument right now. [Applause.] We cannot definitely decide whether or not we can spend our way to recovery. Only experience will demonstrate that. We can try some experiments and if they prove to be a failure we can repeal them, but we cannot repeal a debt.

Gentlemen may argue, and sincerely so—I do not question their motives—that that is the best way out. May I say that we have spent liberally for the past 7 years and it has not brought us out. I believe the theory is wrong.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I want to call the gentleman's attention to sections 10 and 15 of this bill. Congress recently in its wisdom required the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Electric Farm and Home Authority, and several other agencies that did their own financing and raised their own funds by the issuance of bonds to come to the Appropriations Committee of the Congress to have their appropriating and administrative expenses passed upon by the Congress. Section 15 of this bill permits those agencies to have their administrative expenses allocated by the Director of the Budget. Section 10 of the bill provides that the departments may use such funds-that is, the billion dollars allocated to them-for carrying out their respective purposes without further appropriation and such funds shall be continuously available for such purposes. May I say to the gentleman that is a revolutionary departure from our present procedure with reference to appropriations.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I agree with the gentleman. That is something, if the rule is not voted down, which we will have to consider when we get to it.

Here is my point. Only experience will demonstrate whether we can spend our way back to recovery. We have been spending, and even the advocates of that scheme must admit the results have not been what they predicted. We have already appropriated $13,000,000,000 this year, and if we spend it, it will exceed the present limit of $45,000,000,000 of national debt. Federal lending agencies, according to the Senate debate, can lend an additional $7,000,000,000 under existing law.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will yield to the gentleman if he will give me more time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. Does the gentleman maintain that we have made no progress if the record and statistics show that we have increased our income from $40,000,000,000 to $68,000,000,000?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The gentleman knows I supported the first two recovery acts, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, the Federal Housing Act, the Reconstruction Finance Act, the Farm Credit Administration Act, and numerous other lending measures of a temporary character. I was willing to go along in the midst of the depression and do a reasonable amount of spending to help out, but I think we have reached the point where we are not priming a business pump. When we put into this bill a provision that the R. F. C. can borrow money to manufacture and lease railroad equipment to the railroads, we are not priming a private pump. We are setting up a Government pump to compete with private business, which I do not think is sound. I think we have spent enough money. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am not approaching this matter in a partisan frame of mind, either. I am approaching it from the standpoint of the real economic problem that our country is confronted with.

On page 10604 of the Congressional Record I have a speech in which I explain a certain amendment which I intend to offer to this bill later on, but to which I do not propose to refer right now in these brief 4 minutes. The thing I want to emphasize, if I can get it done in the 4 minutes, is that the general economic situation we face in this industrial civilization of ours can be summed up briefly thus: In order to have business prosperity you must have a consuming power flowing through the pockets of the people which is equivalent to the capacity of the Nation to produce wealth. We have a situation today where the volume of savings which accumulates year by year in the hands of a comparatively few people is so great that it tends to make it impossible for agriculture and industry to recapture the value of the goods and services that they have produced in that current year. This is probably the root cause of depression.

There are three or four different alternative ways of seeking a solution to that problem. One of them is the general method that is described roughly and, I think, erroneously, as the "restoration of confidence." By that method, you might once again induce people to put their money at the disposal of Wall Street and to make what will be called investments. But those investments will not be profitable unless the buying power of the people is large enough to purchase the additional volume of goods produced. And we will ultimately have to go through a period of inevitable bankruptcy, foreclosure, and liquidation of debt by that process. If you are not willing to go that way, and I am inclined to think hardly anybody would be willing to risk it for his country, then we must seek some other solution.

My own choice of methods is the establishment of a constitutional monetary system for the United States wherein Congress would issue the money of the Nation and maintain a dollar of stable value. We should establish a sound system of taxation, security, benefits, and pensions, which would give us an even flow of buying power, which has not been done up to this time.

If you are not willing to do that, then we must have a volume of governmental investment to match the failure of private investment to take place, or we will sink deeper and deeper into depression. If this governmental investment is going to occur in fields where there is no return from it, like many of our projects that we have undertaken, then the expenditure is a net subsidy to the business of the country, and must be a net addition to public debt.

If you do that, then there is no objection on the ground that you are interfering in any way with business, but the inevitable consequence is an increase in debt. If you are going to complain about one of these, and insist on keeping the present debt-money system, then you cannot complain about the other.

The bill we have before us, without going into the details of it, is an attempt to accomplish the purpose of compensating for the failure of private investment by means of Government investment but without an increase in public debt. It is an attempt to accomplish the same purpose by making investments in fields where there can be a return. You have your choice between doing it that way and getting a return, and saving an increase in the public debt, or else having to do it in ways where you get no return and where inevitably the public debt is increased. The amendment which I shall offer would, indeed, avoid any sale of bonds at all by the R. F. C. and would thus cause this program to yield a net income to the Treasury. It is explained on page 10606.

The problem of America remains and will remain regardless of what you do with this bill, and the responsibility of this Congress is evidently to meet that problem. Already a cut of one-third has been made in the rolls of W. P. A. If this bill by any chance should be defeated, it then becomes the evident duty of this Congress to do something about the employment problem of the people of America right now. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 8 minutes, to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, there is no need for this legislation to accomplish the purposes expressed in the bill. It has been charged that this is a subterfuge to raise money outside the debt limit without any restriction whatsoever by the Congress upon the expenditure of the money. The reason for it is undoubtedly predicated upon the fact that the national debt is today about $40,500,000,000. The President in the estimates he sent to the Congress stated that at the end of the fiscal year 1940 the public debt will be approximately $44,457,000,000, or a shade under the debt limitation which Congress has placed upon the debt of $45,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, if money can be raised in this unorthodox manner for the purposes of this bill, there is no reason whatsoever why money cannot be raised in this manner to carry on the administrative functions of the Government. How is this money raised? It is raised by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, by the sale of its bonds. The money raised by the sale of the bonds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is then placed in the Treasury of the United States and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has no more jurisdiction over it after it is placed in the Treasury of the United States. So all the publicity which has been given to the fact that these expenditures are to be made under the direction of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is at the least an exaggeration and is not based on the facts. With the exception of the amount of money which will be allocated back to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for railroad loans and for the lease of railroad equipment, the R. F. C. will have nothing to say about how this money is expended.

What does this bill do? In short and in fact, it abrogates the authority of the Congress to control the raising of money. It abrogates the authority of Congress to control the use to which the taxpayers' money is put, and in practice it delegates to the executive branch of the Government the constitutional prerogatives of Congress to appropriate money. It evades by indirection and subterfuge clause 7, section 9, article I, of the Constitution, which states that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriation made by law.

Is there any need to pass this measure to accomplish this purpose? Let me tell you something about the specific items in the bill. In the original bill we provided $750,000,000 for roads. There is at present in the Treasury of the United States $228,000,000 of unused allocations which may be used under the Federal Highway Act if matched by the States. We can thaw that out without raising any new money the same as we did thaw out $80,000,000 of it in 1930 for that purpose. It is not necessary, therefore, to raise one more cent for highways, and we can at the same time make available $456,000,000 with the cooperation of the States.

With respect to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the loans to the railroads, I do not want you to rely upon my statement that no more money is needed. Let us refer to the hearings and see what Mr. Jesse Jones has to say about this. On page 186 of the hearings you will find the following:

Mr. Wolcott. Do you see any particular reason for authorizing the $500,000,000, if you are not going to need more than a third of it for this next year?

Mr. Jones. I think that is for you to determine.

Mr. Wolcott. If we amended the existing law by providing, as has been recommended to the Senate committee with respect to leases of railroad equipment, you would have ample money under your present authorization to make these loans next year?

Mr. Jones. If you take off the existing limitation; yes.
Mr. Wolcott. So you do not need any part of this $500,000,000 if we allow you to lease this equipment?

Mr. Jones. I think we would have ample.

Mr. Speaker, are we going to crowd down the throats of these agencies money they do not want and that they say they do not need to carry out the purposes of this legislation? [Applause.]

With respect to the Rural Electrification Administration, $500,000,000 was asked in the original bill. We cut it to $350,000,000, and all the President wants, according to the Secretary of the Treasury is $20,000,000. We have enacted a program by which the R. E. A. may make loans up to $40,000,-000 for each of 9 years. This started in 1927. Mr. Carmody, appearing before the Committee on Banking and Currency, said that we will not know until these projects have been energized for at least 5 years whether or not they will be selfliquidating. According to the provisions of this bill, which compels them to find that the projects will be self-liquidating, there cannot be allocated one cent of the money which is to be available for R. E. A., because there is not one R. E. A. project at the present time, according to the testimony, which is self-liquidating, and we will not know for the next 3 years whether or not these projects are self-liquidating.

Now, with respect to the Export-Import Bank we raise the capital $100,000,000 and Mr. Jones said, as late as this last spring, if he were given $125,000,000 altogether he would have ample funds to function during this year for all the purposes for which the Export-Import Bank can function. They can do a general banking business, and I want to warn this House that unless we place some restriction on the charter of the Export-Import Bank they can, and they will, do an import business to the prejudice of the farmers and the laboring men of this Nation.

With respect to the Department of Agriculture, in the original act the figure was $600,000,000. The committee cut that to $400,000,000. I assume that the members of the Committee on Agriculture of this House, which has had this problem before them for years, know a little more about the needs of agriculture than the Banking and Currency Committee which has never had an agricultural bill before it in my recollection. [Applause.]

The Committee on Agriculture just last week refused to report out a bill providing for additional farm-tenant loans in the amount of $350,000,000. Therefore, the amount made available in this bill can be safely reduced by at least this amount.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURNI.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I feel there is little use today to appeal to the gentlemen on my left, the Republicans. They seem to be rather solidly against even the consideration of this bill. So my remarks shall be addressed to my colleagues of my own party.

This bill, or a similar bill, was taken up in the Senate and debated for several days. Many amendments were adopted and on last evening the Senate passed the bill. The rule that is now before you is simply to make the consideration of this bill in order. It is an absolutely open rule. Any Member of the House, it matters not what his predilections may be, may offer any amendment to perfect the bill as he would like to see it perfected, and then if not perfected as he would like to have it, he may vote against the bill on final passage.

It seems to me we are asking little of our Democratic colleagues, and I say this, of course, without criticism and without any feeling except the kindliest toward everyone on my side of the House; but it seems to me that when the President of the United States makes a recommendation to the Congress, when a committee after hearings and long consideration reports a bill, it is asking little of our colleagues on our own side of the House to make that bill in order and to consider it in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

This, in my opinion, if the bill is passed in a reasonable form and if it is administered in a reasonable way, will be one of the most helpful recovery measures that has been attempted in the last 6 years. From the farm to the city, from the farm worker to the city worker, and from the farm to the small town and the large town businessman, I believe this bill will be helpful.

Something has been said here about rural electrification. When I think of all the bills it was my privilege and honor to be the author of, I am the proudest of having been the coauthor of a bill to bring the conveniences of electrification to the farm homes of this country. [Applause.] I also am proud of the fact that I had the privilege of voting for the Farm Tenancy Act, to bring the people of this country into home ownership, if possible. I am proud of the fact that I have voted for P. W. A. measures that have brought buildings to the countryside, the villages, the towns and the great cities and have made work from the mine and the forest clear up to the time when the building was completed.

Something has also been said here about a railroad loan. I hate to repeat it, but for 24 years I studied the railroad question. I have always been, as I am now, utterly and totally against Government ownership of railroads. I tremble for my country and its future when I contemplate Government ownership of railroads and adding a million or a million and a half more people to the civil rolls of this Government. We are going to have Government ownership of railroads unless something is done that will make them a little more prosperous and make it a little easier for them to operate. Not as many people of the country are for Gov-ernment ownership of railroads now as there were a few years ago, but we will have Government ownership of railroads when, and only when, the railroad management comes down on Washington with their hands above their heads and say, "You must have the railroads to do the business of the country; we have carried them as long as we can."

I could stand here and touch every element of this bill, one that I believe will put people to work, put idle money to work, in an effort to make the business of the country prosperous again and to bring the country back to a more peaceable and a more peaceful condition, when labor may be employed, when capital may be active, and when every man's work on the farm, in the mine, in the factory, or in the counting house will mean something to him, because we all know that if this country is to live, to live as a great democracy, if it is to be a beacon light to free people throughout the nations of the earth, we must have peace at home among our own people, and we will not have the kind of peace for which we pray until men and women are given an opportunity to eat bread by the sweat of their brow, that capital may be able to work and that the people who own this country and who have helped to build it may have peace. [Applause,]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 167, nays 193, answered "present" 3, not voting 65, as follows:

HOURS OF DUTY FOR FIREMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA-VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 464)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3314, Seventy-sixth Congress, "An act to provide shorter hours of duty for members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in recommending disapproval of this act, invite attention to the fact that the act, if approved, will require the employment of 207 additional members of the fire department, costing approximately $414,000 during the first year of operation and about $20,000 a year for 5 years as longevity increase in salaries, making an ultimate additional annual cost of about $500,000.

The Commissioners indicate that in the present financial condition of the District the cost of this act cannot be met without creating a revenue deficit. It is estimated by the Commissioners that the new District tax law, which was recently passed by Congress, will raise in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, about $1,830,000 less in revenue than was raised under the District tax law theretofore in effect. This amount, however, will be reduced to approximately $830,000 by the increase in the Federal payment to the District of Columbia in the fiscal year 1940. The result is that the revenue now made available to the District government is hardly sufficient to meet its usual and ordinary expenses and necessary capital improvements, without including the additional cost which would be imposed on the District by this act.

The Commissioners are of the opinion that, considering the actual hours of fire-fighting services as compared with the hours of duty of firemen in the District of Columbia, and considering the hours of duty required of firemen in the District as compared with the hours of duty of firemen in most of the larger cities throughout the country, no undue hardship will be suffered by local firemen in continuing the present hours of duty.

The Commissioners further state that under the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, they are directed to cause a survey to be made for the purpose of determining what consolidations of present fire-department stations can be effected and as a result thereof what, if any, economies may be made in the cost of operating the fire department, and they believe that no change should be made in the present status of the fire department or its personnel until the completion of this survey.

The Commissioners state that they appreciate the services rendered by the firemen in the District of Columbia and regret that, for the reasons given, they feel it incumbent upon them at this time to recommend disapproval of this act.

I concur in the recommendation of the Board of Commissioners and am, therefore, withholding my approval of this

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 463)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, a bill (H. R. 6834) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits of the District of Columbia.

The bill proposes to confer on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to settle claims in behalf of the District of Columbia. It is apparently the purpose of the legislation to render it possible to compromise small claims without recourse to litigation and thereby save the disproportionate expense which would be entailed by bringing suit in such instances.

The objective of the measure is clearly desirable. Unfortunately, however, its scope is far broader than the end in view, since no limitation on the size of the claim that would be subject to the proposed authority is included. Such a safeguard, in an appropriate amount, would seem to be requisite.

In view of these considerations, I am constrained to return the bill without my approval.

ESTATE OF JOHN B. BRACK-VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 462)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2480, an act for the relief of the estate of John B. Brack.

This bill provides-

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of John B. Brack (XC-489817), the sum of $625. The payment of such sum shall be in full payment of all claims under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended and supplemented, based on the service of the said John B. Brack, who is not survived by any dependent within the restricted classes of beneficiaries under such act.

Section 601 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act

(a) If the veteran has died before making application under section 302, or, if entitled to receive adjusted-service pay, has died section 302, or, if entitled to receive adjusted-service pay, has died after making application but before he has received payment under title IV, then the amount of his adjusted-service credit shall (as soon as practicable after receipt of an application in accordance with the provisions of section 604, but not before March 1, 1925) be paid to his dependents, in the following order of preference:

(1) To the widow;

(2) If no widow entitled to payment, then to the children, share and show allies.

and share alike:

(3) If no widow or children entitled to payment, then to the mother;

(4) If no widow, children, or mother entitled to payment, then to the father.

As the father died before completion of his claim and the veteran had no other dependents enumerated in section 601, there is no one entitled to the $625 adjusted-service credit. Section 603 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act

The payments authorized by section 601 shall be made in 10 equal quarterly installments, unless the total amount of the payment is less than $50, in which case it shall be paid on the first installment date. No payments under the provisions of this title shall be made to the heirs or legal representatives of any dependents entitled thereto who die before receiving all the installment payments, but the remainder of such payments shall be made to the dependent or dependents in the next order of preference under section 601. All payments under this title shall be made by the

This section was manifestly intended to restrict the payment of adjusted-service credit to the enumerated relatives and to prohibit payment of any benefits to the estates of deceased persons. It appears from the hearings and reports of the Congress prior to enactment of the Adjusted Compensation Act and subsequent amendments that payment of adjusted-service credit is intended for those dependents within the group and in the manner stated. The report of the House Committee on War Claims, to accompany H. R. 2480, states that "The deceased, John B. Brack, left surviving him four brothers and sisters who are next of kin, and who would be entitled to this adjudicated debt, namely, $625, under the laws of North Carolina." The provisions of law recognizing certain dependents of World War veterans for death compensation purposes have never included brothers and sisters as such, the group never having extended beyond widows, children, and dependent parents.

Approval of the bill would have the effect of granting benefits to the estate of this veteran which are denied in other cases where the facts are similar. There are no circumstances present in this case which would warrant singling it out for preferential treatment to the discrimination of thousands of similar cases.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

MARKERS FOR CERTAIN GRAVES-VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 461)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, House bill 985, an act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certain markers for certain graves.

Under existing law, headstones of durable stone, in designs approved by the Secretary of War, are furnished upon application for the graves of men honorably discharged from the Army, or who die in military service. The War Department furnishes these headstones, in American white marble, in four designs, three of the upright type and one flat marker for use on graves in private cemeteries where vertical monumentation is prohibited.

This enactment would in no way affect the marking of graves in cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War. Its sole purpose is to enable the Secretary of War to furnish an acceptable marker for use in those private cemeteries in which the stone marker now authorized is not

I recognize fully that new conceptions of cemetery design, landscaping, and monumentation have found widespread public approval in recent years, and that the marking of our military graves in the newer private cemeteries must conform to the general pattern of their surroundings. I object to H. R. 985, however, because it restricts to bronze the material which would be authorized for use in supplementing the present prescription of "durable stone." I would not object to legislation which would authorize the Secretary of War to furnish, upon application, for use on military graves in private cemeteries where the stone markers are not acceptable, monuments of such design and material as may be approved by him within present unit cost limits.

ALLOWANCES FOR UNIFORMS AND EQUIPMENT TO OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 460)

The Speaker laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, House bill 3321, an act to provide allowances for uniforms and equipment to certain officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

This bill would provide that officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps, eligible for active-duty training, shall be entitled for a period of 3 years after their original appointment and under such regulations as the War Department may prescribe to an allowance of $50 per annum for the purchase of necessary uniforms and equipment.

The bill does not make performance of active-duty training a condition precedent to the payment of this allowance; thus every newly commissioned member of the Officers' Reserve Corps would be entitled to a maximum possible uniform allowance of $150 merely by establishing eligibility for active-duty training, irrespective of whether he enters upon such duty, or whether, if ordered to active duty, the training is such as to require the wearing of the uniform.

I am not unmindful that the act of June 25, 1938 (Public, No. 732, 75th Cong., 3d sess.), provides a uniform allowance to commissioned and warrant officers of the Naval Reserve. However, active or training duty, with pay, at a location where uniforms are required to be worn, or the authorized performance of 14 drills, is a prerequisite to the payment of this allowance.

I would not object to legislation authorizing a uniform allowance to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps under original appointment upon completion, in separate fiscal years, of each of their first three periods of active-duty training, of 3 months or less, during which periods the uniform is required to be worn.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

RED LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 459)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval enrolled H. R. 3248, which would authorize a payment of $15 to each member of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

The proposed payment would be made from a tribal fund derived from the sale of timber products which are manufactured at the tribal sawmill from stumpage cut on the Red Lake Reservation. The cost of operating the sawmill is defrayed from this fund. While I would have no objection to the distribution of any profits derived from this enterprise, I am informed that no part of the present balance in the operating fund represents an excess of operating income over operating cost. On the contrary, it appears that the mill is in debt to the Red Lake Tribe for stumpage in an amount which is far in excess of the difference between the balance in the tribal fund and the amount that will be required to operate the enterprise during the current fiscal year. In view of this and the fact that certain transportation problems have arisen recently which may result in a higher production cost, I believe that it would be unwise to deplete the mill fund at this time by the disbursement therefrom of some $30,000 for per capita distribution among the Red Lake Indians.

Furthermore, there appears to be little justification at present for a per capita payment to these Indians from the standpoint of economic need. Many of them have an income from the fishing industry, while others are employed on C. C. C. work, on Indian Service road work, on W. P. A. projects, and in the timber and lumber operations on the reservation. In fact, employment opportunities exceed the requirements of the Indians, making it necessary to employ whites and Indians of other tribes to meet the demand for labor at the Red Lake Agency. I am informed that the needs of many of the unemployables are being met by the operation of the Social Security Act.

There is now under consideration a land-use program for the Red Lake Reservation which, if inaugurated, will require for its success the use of such tribal capital as may then be available. It is certain that the expenditure of the tribal funds for such a purpose will result in greater benefits to the members of the tribe than could possibly flow from a per capita distribution of tribal assets.

For the foregoing reasons I am compelled to withhold approval of the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 1, 1939.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT OF 1921

Mr. DOXEY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4998) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent Mr. Voorhis of California and Mr. Mapes were granted permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, an hour or so ago I received unanimous consent to extend my remarks to include a speech delivered in honor of the Goliad battle by Judge Davenport. The speech is of unusual length, and I inadvertently failed to state that I had submitted it to the Government Printing Office for an estimate of the cost. I did so, and I have a letter from the Printer, stating that it is estimated it will cost $270.

I desire to ask unanimous consent to vacate the first request I made and renew the request now, notwithstanding the estimate of the Printer.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a short letter from the Chickasaw Indians of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a resolution passed by the Missouri State Federation of Labor on May 24; also a resolution passed by the Central Labor Union of Kansas City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL FACILITIES IN THE PANAMA CANAL ZONE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 203.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 203

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5129, a bill authorizing and providing for the construction of additional facilities on the Canal Zone for the purposes of more adequately providing for the defense of the Panama Canal and for increasing its capacity for the future needs of interoceanic shipping. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is a unanimous report of the committee, I am wondering whether the gentleman from Illinois desires any time on the rule.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; we do. Just a few minutes; but we are not opposed to the bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order the bill (H. R. 5129) authorizing and providing for the construction of additional facilities on the Canal Zone for the purposes of more adequately providing for the defense of the Panama Canal and for increasing its capacity for the future needs of interoceanic shipping.

The rule provides for 2 hours of general debate, and the bill will be considered under the 5-minute rule. I am informed that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has reported this bill by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Speaker, the Army engineers have recommended additional locks in the Panama Canal because the battle-ships we are now building will be much larger than anything expected at the time the Panama Canal was built. At that time we believed that the width, as well as the length, of the locks was sufficient to take care of any ship that might be built. I had the honor and privilege of being at the Canal site when locks were being built. I was amazed then at the magnitude of these locks; and, therefore, it is surprising to me to realize how this country has advanced not only in the matter of the construction of battleships, but even in the construction of commercial vessels.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe now that we were unwise in authorizing those three $115,000,000 battle-ships? They are causing us now to go beyond the building of battleships to the point where we have to change everything we own in order to operate them.

Mr. SABATH. Not necessarily, because conditions forced us to do this. In addition to that, other vessels have been increased in size and traffic has increased until the point is reached requiring additional facilities at the Canal.

Mr. Speaker, when the request for the granting of a rule was up for hearing by the Rules Committee, being more or less familiar with the history of the Panama Canal, I questioned the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, whether a proper survey had been made and consideration given to existing conditions. While he assured me the bill had been recommended by the War Department engineers, notwithstanding that fact, I wrote a letter to the President questioning the wisdom of appropriating $277,000,000 for additional locks, having in mind the slides in Culebra Cut which has cost millions and fearing recurrences, I felt that the proposed bypass would be too close to the Canal-being only a half to three-quarters of a mile from the Canal and both the old and new locks might be subject to attack at the same time. Therefore, I entertained the thought that a new canal should be constructed, perhaps in Nicarauga. I also raised the question as to the employment of alien labor and the wages to be paid. In answer to my communication I received a letter from the President in which he notes my suggestions and indicates his own opinion as to certain changes, to the extent of conveying to me the gist of some proposed correcting amendments, which I understand the chairman of the committee [Mr. Bland] will offer to the bill at the proper time.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. SCHULTE. There has been a great deal of discussion about the work that has been done on the Panama Canal. I wonder if the gentleman can tell us whether in the event this bill is passed American citizens will be employed in the construction of these facilities?

Mr. SABATH. It is my hope that they will be, and I believe arrangements and agreements have been entered into by which that will be brought about. I am fully aware of the gentleman's interest in the cause of labor and know that he desires only Americans employed there who would be receiving a fair wage, and working only such reasonable hours as those the gentleman has advocated for many years.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If they employ only American citizens down there would that interfere in any way with the goodneighbor policy?

Mr. SABATH. I think not, because these countries, whether it be Panama, Colombia, or some other country, recognize that under the leadership of President Roosevelt the policy of this country is to be on good terms with and to aid all our neighbors to the very extreme; and we have demonstrated that. We enjoy the friendship and good will of these countries now as we never enjoyed them before, as shown by the continuous increase of our exports to these countries and the friendly relations that exist between our Republic and those of South and Central America.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to detain the House, for there is no controversy over this bill. We had a little contest a short while ago, by the way, Mr. Speaker; perhaps some of the Members may have forgotten about the vote that was taken a few minutes ago. I know this, however, Mr. Speaker, that the American people will not forget the vote that was taken. [Applause.] The American people will hold responsible not only the solid Republican minority but also some of the Democrats who were misled into acting and voting as Republicans. [Applause.] I thank you for your approval of what I have said and am indeed gratified that so many of you agree with me. I am only sorry that Democratic votes are being used in this House to try and destroy the work and program of our President and our Democratic Party.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. No; not for the moment.

Mr. Speaker, in view of what has taken place today, I feel that adjournment will be hastened, which I have suggested for some time, because I realize the membership of the House has not been in the frame of mind to give due consideration to important legislation. My opinion was amply confirmed just a few moments ago.

It seems to me that the Republican membership, under the whip and spur of their leader and pressure from above, feel that their united opposition to all proposed beneficial legislation will be helpful to them in the coming 1940 Presidential campaign. But I wish to assure them they are making the same mistake which they did in 1935. They are cutting off their noses to spite their faces. They are made to believe, by their leaders, because some Republican newspapers applaud their action, that they are following the sentiment of the country, but they are mistaken. I have been here many years and I have seen many Republicans as well as many Democrats come to grief because they underestimated the intelligence, sentiment, and feeling of the common people-the sentiment of their constituents. This applied, as I have stated, not only to Republicans, but to some Democrats whose names I would mention if I did not want to take up the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I regret to see so many Republicans and some Democrats digging their own political graves by voting as they did against the project lending bill and other beneficial and constructive bills recommended by the President so as to bring about greater reemployment and improved business conditions—all intended for the interest and welfare of our great country. Regardless of what the Wall Street-controlled press may say about the President, you and they know that he is brave and sincere in his efforts to improve the condition of the underprivileged and to provide better living conditions for them.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the votes of some of my Democratic colleagues are spite votes. I have observed nearly all the gentlemen from Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia, North Carolina, Texas, and a scattering from Ohio and Pennsylvania, cast their votes purely for political reasons against the lending bill. There were some who actually voted against the rule resolution because they did not have time to digest the benefits that would come to their constituency under the provisions of the bill. Personally, I regretted to see them take the erroneous position that they did, because I admire them and hold many of them in the highest esteem. I tried to prevail upon them not to err by explaining the benefits to be derived to all sections of the country upon the passage of the bill. My only regret is that I was not in position to familiarize the members with all the communications and appeals that came to me in the past few days in behalf of the lending bill. I have done my duty. The responsibility is not mine, and it will not be up to me to explain to their constituencies—that responsibility and impossible task will be theirs, when the hungry, the unemployed, and underprivileged visit them when they return to their homes after adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, I have digressed from speaking on the legislation now under consideration because I feel keenly the disappointment awaiting millions of people in the rural sections of our country in being deprived of the great aid and benefits that the lending legislation would have brought to them as well as to the people of my district and State and to the large centers in all sections of the country. It most surely would have created additional purchasing power which would have meant so much in bringing about reemployment.

Mr. Speaker, I return to speak to the rule making the Panama Canal locks bill in order, but I feel it is not necessary for me to take up any more time in further explaining the need of these additional locks, knowing that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bland] the chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, will ably give you information on the provisions of the bill and will convince the House of the need of immediate action on the rule and bill.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the membership of the House for their courteous treatment. If I have used any harsh words or expressions toward anyone it was because I have been so extremely interested in the enactment of legislation that would have accelerated the return of that prosperity to which the people of our great country are entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the defense of the Panama Canal and the enlargement of the locks there to enable ships, which are now pressed for space, to go through. I do not believe any of us here have any objection to the bill. We want to make the Panama Canal Zone as invulnerable as possible. From the reports received we find an ever-increasing number of large ships going through the canal which are scraping on the sides. It is therefore extremely important, according to the reports that have come to the President, that these additional locks be provided.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the committee to certain observations in this bill which I think are of vital importance.

On page 2, line 8 of the bill, there is the following language:

For the purposes aforesaid, the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized to employ such persons as he may deem necessary.

According to the figures covering the Panama Canal Zone, the Government hires 13,000 employees, of which 10,000 are aliens. Their work consists chiefly of being timekeepers, watchmen, policemen, brakemen, and so forth. I wonder why this bill should come in permitting the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone to continue to hire aliens to do this type of work when there are 12,000,000 American citizens now walking the streets looking for work?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why cannot these employees be required to be American citizens, civil-service employees, if you please? I note the language exempts these new employees from the provisions of the Civil Service and Classification Acts.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I think the gentleman is correct. I would like to have the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries offer an amendment about as follows:

Provided, That none of the funds herein authorized may be used for the purpose of paying the salary or wages of any alien directly or through any contractor or subcontractor indirectly.

I do not know why the United States Treasury should be paying the salaries of an estimated 10,000 aliens from Jamaica.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman used the word "authorized." Does not the gentleman think there should be added also "and appropriated as a result of the authorization"?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. What is the estimate for making these contemplated changes in the locks, the various changes that will be made in the Panama Canal?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The estimate of the cost, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is $277,000,000. In the fiscal year 1940 not more than $15,000,000 shall be appropriated.

Mr. RICH. If we had eliminated the $115,000,000 battleships from our naval appropriations would it have been necessary to make the changes that it is contemplated to make if this bill passes?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the history of the past 20 years shows that we continually build larger ships. I believe it is safe to predict that the world will continue to build larger ships. Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that if we build them any larger the world will sink pretty soon?

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. SANDAGER. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is not so much a question of building large ships as it is a question of having a bypass in case of sabotage, so that if a bomb or a shell or anything of that nature were exploded in the canal it would not block up the canal and you would have a bypass that would be operative. The question of size is important, but it is necessary to have a bypass.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. So I would say to the committee having this bill under consideration that I believe it is important that there be some stipulation made whereby the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, whoever he may be, will not have the right as a dictator to go out and pick any foreign agents he wishes to employ there. It should be stipulated at least that the men doing this labor should be American citizens instead of foreigners.

Mr. BLAND. I may say to the gentleman that the determination of those policies is in the President of the United States under present law. Very serious questions of health, of cost, and of policies are involved, to such an extent that it would be practically impossible for me to concede such an amendment at this time. The President has entire control of the policies with respect to the employment of labor on the Panama Canal. I, for one, would be delighted to see the conditions such that American labor could be employed. I went down there and became convinced that if that condition ever is brought about it will be through a series of years. This situation will be brought out in debate on that question. The cost alone of constructing the additional facilities for the Panama Canal with all American labor would be increased $81,000,000, and the cost of this project would be increased $34,000,000 if all above the grade of laborer were Americans. If we were to put an item of that kind in this bill it would probably deter the use of the existing forces and very much impair the construction of the project.

May I say that if any Member wants to introduce a bill requiring all American labor or requiring that the number of alien laborers employed be reduced from year to year, if that bill comes before my committee I will give full hearings on it and let everybody be heard. It is a very, very broad question from an international point of view, from a humane point of view, and from a health point of view as to American citizens.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I appreciate the statement of the able chairman of the committee, but I still insist that with all these boys in the C. C. C. camps who are costing the Federal Government $50,000,000 a month, I do not believe the climate of Panama would inconvenience them in any way.

Mr. BLAND. There is pending before the House today a bill that was reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and introduced at the request of the gentleman who is largely urging the employment of all American labor, predicated upon the fact that there is but a short period of life after these men work down there because of the unhealthy conditions. We have to a great extent conquered yellow fever and malaria, but the conditions of work of this kind require that the men go out into the jungle part of the Canal Zone.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In view of the fact that there are 12,000,000 persons unemployed I still would like to have the chairman of the committee offer an amendment providing that the funds going out of the United States Treasury for this purpose be used for American labor instead of foreign labor.

Going further with this bill, it states that the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone may fix the compensation of the employees without regard to any other law affecting such compensation.

Mr. BLAND. I have an amendment that I believe will entirely take care of that situation. Certainly, it is satisfactory to the men of the Canal Zone.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I hope so, because under this bill the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone would be able to give anybody he chose $20 or $30 or $50 an hour. Is not that true?

Mr. BLAND. I hardly believe that would be true, but at the same time I believe the gentleman will feel that the amendment we have prepared amply covers that.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am glad to hear that, Mr. Chairman.

Another feature of this bill is that in line 11 of page 2 it gives the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone the right to authorize the making of any contracts, continuing or otherwise, in advance of actual appropriations.

Mr. BLAND. We have an amendment that I believe will amply cover that feature.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, Would the gentleman care to state what the amendment is, because under this provision the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, 3,000 miles away, without coming back here to Washington and without obtaining the approval of the President, the Secretary of War, or anyone else, could go ahead next year and enter into contracts in the amount of $277,000,000 before the Committee on Appropriations would even have the matter before them. This would give the Governor the right to enter into contracts to bind the United States Government to the extent of $277,000,000, without the Committee on Appropriations having anything to do with it whatever.

Mr. BLAND. The express language that was contained in the bill as it was originally reported would appear to bear out somewhat that contention. That was not intended by the author of this bill and consequently we have several amendments. One of the objections was that he could lower the rates in the Canal Zone. We have an amendment providing that the compensation of such persons shall not be lower than the compensation paid for the same or similar services to other employees on the Panama Canal. Then, provided further, that rates of compensation in excess of those authorized by law for other employees of the Panama Canal shall not be paid without the approval of the Secretary of War. This was to take care of special experts and persons of that type.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is with regard to pay. What about entering into these contracts?

Mr. BLAND. And provided further that the Governor of the Panama Canal, with the approval of the Secretary of War, is authorized to engage, under agreement when deemed necessary, expert assistants in the various arts and sciences upon terms and rates of compensation for services and incidental expenses, and to make contracts without the advertisement hereinafter prescribed, with respect to architectural or engineering services.

I am not reading all of the proposed amendment, but it also authorizes the making of any and all contracts necessary, and there was eliminated from the bill part of line 10, on page 2, and all of lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15. Eliminating those particular lines and substituting what I have here is said to cover that very situation because under general law there could be no appropriations without action by the Congress.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In other words, I take it that the gentleman has amendments that will limit the wages that the Governor of the Panama Canal can pay employees?

Mr. BLAND. He is governed by the rules that apply there now. There was a complaint that he could lower wages.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. But the gentleman has changed that.

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Now, in regard to contracts, under this bill he would be permitted to enter into contracts in the amount of $277,000,000 without obtaining the approval of anybody back here in Washington, the Congress or the Secretary of War. Under your amendment will that be taken care of so that he will have to obtain the approval of someone back here before he can enter into contracts amounting to over one-quarter of a billion dollars?

Mr. BLAND. On page 2, line 9, after the word "authorized", insert the letter "(a)" and strike out the word "with" in line 10 and all of lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15.

These are the lines that I think the gentleman refers to when he says it gives broad power to make contracts without reference to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. And also without the approval of the Secretary of War back here.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; I am told that takes care of it.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Then, Mr. Speaker, with the able chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries bringing in these amendments, I do not believe there should be any objection by anyone in this Chamber, with the exception of that phase of it which I personally hope he will amend so as to provide that none of these funds shall be used except for American labor and providing also that there shall be a discontinuance of employment of all these aliens from Jamaica. Ten thousand aliens from Jamaica are now on the pay roll of the Federal Government in the Panama Canal Zone as compared with a total employment of 13,000, which I think is utterly unfair.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is mistaken about that, and I know he has not gone into the figures. The 10,000 include, first, 2,500 Panamanians which would reduce the number to 7,500. Many of these people who are employed there are people who were brought to the Panama Canal for the construction work on the Canal when it was impossible to get Americans. The question involved is a very broad one that we could not pass on by an amendment here. Many of these people were brought in there when the turn-over was so great that the work would not have been completed otherwise, and many Americans could not have stood the climate and the disease in that country. It was brought out this year before our committee that during this period of construction there were Americans who were stricken with yellow fever, typhoid, malaria, and other diseases. This testimony was brought out in connection with a bill which we reported and which has received a Presidential veto. One man there, an engineer or possibly a doctor, stated he would retire at night with four occupying beds adjoining him and the next morning three would be empty. These were the conditions that existed there at that time and these men were brought in and were taken from their homes in the other islands. They cannot be dismissed and made charges upon the Republic of Panama. They cannot be repatriated back home. Some of them have been born in the Canal Zone. These are broad, practical international questions that must be dealt with.

Then there is also testimony that our own men carried down there cannot stand what they call the white heat. As I said, we have conquered yellow fever and malaria, but the testimony introduced before the committee on another bill, by the gentleman who is sponsoring these amendments, shows that even the insurance companies have restrictions on these men working there. You have not the accommodations to take care of these men, if you were to impose all American labor in this Canal Zone, and you would increase the cost. You could not take care of them because you have not the accommodations on the Canal Zone. You must wait to provide them.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I merely submitted these observations, Mr. Speaker, in order that the membership should have the information before them.

Mr. BLAND. I would welcome any man in this House introducing a resolution to reduce from year to year the number of men employed there. I do not know, but I doubt that it could be made effective, but I would welcome it, because it will give an opportunity for every man to come before the committee and state his case and show whether it could be done. If it can be done, I would like to see it done.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why would it not be well to provide that the Governor of the Panama Canal in the making of contracts should make them subject to the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I understood that the gentleman from Virginia said that he had an amendment to that effect.

Mr. BLAND. This is practically subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why not put the language in there? Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Did not the gentleman from Virginia tell me he had an amendment which would make these contracts in the Panama Canal Zone subject to the approval of the Secretary here in Washington, instead of some czar going in there and paying the wages he wants to pay them and at whatever rate he wishes? They should have the approval of somebody here in Washington.

Mr. BLAND. That is expressly in there, and as I understand the machinery of these contracts they must be approved by the Secretary of War. This man operates under the Secretary of War, and so far as labor is concerned, the President of the United States has entire control of the whole thing.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. According to this resolution the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone could employ anybody he wants to employ and he could fix the compensation at $20 an hour if he wanted to, or he could enter into contracts binding the United States Treasury up to $277,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. The general law prevents that. I am advised that the laws of the United States, unless special authority is given to him, would prevent any such contract as that, and for that reason we struck that language out of the bill which would have permitted it.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. What would the gentleman make out of this?

For the purpose aforesaid, the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized to employ such persons as he may deem necessary and to fix their compensation without regard to any other law affecting such compensation.

Mr. BLAND. But that is stricken out.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Also-

To authorize the making of any contracts, continuing or other-ise, in advance of actual appropriations, aggregating not more than the total cost authorized herein.

Does it say anything there to the effect that the Governor of the Panama Canal, whoever he might be, has to come back and receive the approval of anyone here in Washington? I would like to see the gentleman from Virginia offer an amendment there providing that it would be necessary for this Governor of the Panama Canal to come back and receive the approval of the War Department before he can enter into those contracts to a total of $277,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will yield right there, the amendment provides:

And provided further, That the Governor of the Panama Canal, with the approval of the Secretary of War, is authorized to engage under agreement when deemed necessary expert assistants in the various arts.

(b) To authorize the making of contracts without advertise-

And, generally, to make any and all contracts necessary for the prosecution of the work that is authorized. So that every part comes under the Secretary of War.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the proposed amendment meets the objection, because it provides for the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FADDIS. A bill that has passed the House and that has already passed the Senate, at the request of the Quartermaster General, makes it possible to enter into contract in the Panama Canal Zone, and I believe from my recollection of the bill it would also apply to this construction.

Mr. BLAND. I do not like to guess at things if I can help it.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under the amendment, which I have not seen, will it limit the Governor General of the Panama Canal so that the power is taken from him to fix the compensation at any rate he may see fit?

Is he limited in fixing hours and wages, or does it let him pay any salary or compensation that he so desires? Will the gentleman answer that?

Mr. BLAND. It shall not be lower than the compensation paid for the same or similar services to other employees.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am not talking about lower; but how about higher?

Mr. BLAND. The rates of compensation in excess of those authorized by law for other employees of the Panama Canal shall not be paid without approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I think that satisfies me.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman in favor of the provision to leave these contracts without advertisement, which naturally means without competitive bidding?

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. That is exactly similar to language that is contained in some of the other legislation, and only refers to special designs. Let me read it:

Authorize the making of any contracts-

And so forth-

without advertisement hereinafter specified with architectural or engineering corporations, firms, or individuals for the production and delivery of designs, plans, drawings, and specifications.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why should we not have advertising and competitive bidding on those contracts?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. When General Goethals built the Panama Canal originally, the report showed it was impossible to enter into competitive bidding and get anything done down there.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Well, that was a long time ago. In view of the fact that this bill carries a potential appropriation of over $277,000,000, and in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee admits that the bill as reported by the committee is ridiculous—that it is wide open and full of imperfections which have to be cured with a lengthy perfecting amendment which he is to offer and which is not in print and available to the Membersnot the gentleman believe that under orderly legislative procedure we should send this bill back to your committee so that you can give it a little consideration and bring it back to the floor in printed form so that the Members will know what they are voting on?

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield on that?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will permit me to answer that, I am not able to say what the gentleman shall determine is ridiculous or not, but when the gentleman says that amendments were not considered by the committee, each and every amendment which I propose to offer here was taken up in the committee and considered by us, and one of the amendments to which I have been referring just now was amended at the very able suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Keefe].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Well, where are the amendments which you propose to offer? Your committee reported this bill which you admit now has to be drastically amended in order to perfect it and make it workable.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think all of us should appreciate the laudable motives and purposes behind this bill. With these perfecting amendments which will be offered, I think the bill should be passed without any question.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made earlier in the day, the remarks which I make now, and which I may make later on.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman asked to revise and extend his remarks and include certain things which I did not hear. Was it for the inclusion of other than his own remarks?

Mr. SABATH. Only the remarks I have made here on various rules and bills, and so on.

Mr, CHURCH. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman will not have an extension extending the lecture to his Democratic colleagues which he partially delivered on the floor, will he?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, when attention was called by some of the gentlemen to the bill, and before the rule was granted, we had a conference with the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Mr. BLAND, and at that time he agreed to amendments, and the amendments met with the approval of all Members. However, before they were submitted, and when the question of labor was being raised. I wrote a letter to the President of the United States, being interested in helping the condition there, as well as here, and I read from the President's letter, dated June 19:

The Governor of the Panama Canal has given further consideration to the provisions of the bill concerning employment, and is recommending that the provisions to which you refer be deleted, and clarifying provisions inserted. The changes recommended are indicated in the attached copy of H. R. 5129, to which your attention is invited. These changes should obviate the criticism voiced in your letter.

In other words, I had criticized some of the provisions, and I was indeed gratified when the chairman of the committee agreed to these amendments, and I was further greatly pleased that the President himself has insisted that amendments should be adopted to clarify the sections that had been criticized.

Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Allen] used all of his time?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; we have concluded.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL FACILITIES FOR THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, before moving to go into the Committee of the Whole, I would like to submit a unanimousconsent request that may save considerable time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5129) authorizing and providing for the construction of additional facilities on the Canal Zone for the purposes of more adequately providing for the defense of the Panama Canal and for increasing its capacity for the future needs of interoceanic shipping may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the improvement and enlargement of the capacity of the Panama Canal in the interests of defense and interoceanic commerce is hereby authorized to be prosecuted by the Governor of the Panama Canal under the supervision of the the Governor of the Panama Canal under the supervision of the Secretary of War, substantially in accordance with the plans set forth and recommended in the report of the Governor of the Panama Canal, dated February 24, 1939, and published as House Document No. 210, and including such appurtenant structures, works, and facilities, and enlargements or improvements of existing channels, structures, works, and facilities as may be deemed necessary, at a total cost not to exceed $277,000,000, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose: Provided, That the initial appropriation for the fiscal year 1940 shall not exceed $15,000,000. For the purposes aforesaid, the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized to employ such persons as he may deem necessary and to fix their compensation without regard to deem necessary and to fix their compensation without regard to any other law affecting such compensation, to authorize the making of any contracts, continuing or otherwise, in advance of actual ing of any contracts, continuing or otherwise, in advance of actual appropriations, aggregating not more than the total cost authorized herein, as may be deemed necessary for the prosecution of the work herein authorized, to provide for the establishment and operation of such auxiliary plants and facilities in connection with the work as may be necessary or desirable, to utilize any of the facilities or services of the Panama Railroad Co. upon such terms and conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and in general to do all things proper and necessary to insure the prompt and efficient completion of the work herein authorized.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. Bland: Page 2, line 9, insert after the word "authorized", the letter "a" in parentheses, strike out the word "with" on line 10 and all of lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the compensation of such persons shall not be lower than the compensation paid for the same or similar services to other employees of the Panama Canal: Provided further, That rates of compensation in excess of those authorized by law for other employees of the Panama Canal shall not be paid without the approval of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the Governor of the Panama Canal, with the approval of the Secretary of War, is authorized to engage, under agreement, when deemed necessary, expert assistance in the various arts and sciences upon terms and rates of compensation for services and incidental expenses in excess of the maximum compensation provided by law for employees of the Panama Canal; (b) to authorize the making of contracts, without the advertisement hereinafter prescribed, with architectural or engineering corporations, firms, or individuals for the production and delivery of designs, plans, drawings, and specifications; and (c) to authorize the making of any and all contracts necessary for the prosecution of the work herein authorized."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the first clause of this amendment prevents the Governor from reducing rates below rates paid other employees of the Panama Canal whose compensation is fixed under the Panama Canal Act at 25 percent above corresponding rates in the United States, a provision very much desired by the Canal employees' organization.

Provision for expert assistance is based on act of July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 948, U.S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 569a).

This amendment which would take the place of the matter on lines 11 to 15 on page 2 is intended to accomplish the following purposes:

I have explained the first clause.

The second clause authorizes payment of compensation above classification rates and Canal rates only with the approval of the Secretary of War, who opposes the general provision authorizing the Governor to fix compensation in excess of rates now authorized by law.

The third clause follows the provision relating to the Engineer Corps of the Army (act of July 3, 1930, 46 Stat. 948, U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 569a) and authorizes the employment of engineering and other firms to prepare special designs and permits the employment for short periods of the highest type of consultant on special technical questions.

The last clause eliminates the objections that the Governor would have too much discretion to enter into contracts of large amounts without reference to appropriations, as worded contracts in excess of appropriations would have to be first approved by the Appropriations Committee.

These amendments, this one in particular, have been very largely explained in the colloquy that occurred between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Allen] and myself. I have no further comments, but in view of the fact the bill is being considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole I think that the gentleman from California [Mr. Izac], and some others who especially desire to be heard, should be allowed to present their views.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that I have to oppose this bill, but I think you will agree with me when I tell you just what the true situation is down in the Canal Zone. This committee has undoubtedly been very fair in its hearings. They have arrived at a conclusion that I cannot agree with, but I believe they have done a good job and that in their opinion this is the solution of the problem in the Canal Zone.

When we started to build the Panama Canal they estimated the cost at $182,000,000. When they turned it over officially in 1921 it had cost $525,000,000, and that with the colored help from Jamaica. Since then 100,000,000 cubic yards of material have been taken out of the cuts, especially at Culebra, at a cost of another $100,000,000, bringing the cost of the Panama Canal to date to $625,000,000.

In 1931 the Board of Army Engineers made a complete survey of the situation along the Isthmus. They found that the proper place to give us better transit facilities for the United States fleet was at Nicaragua by the building of another canal there.

I am drawing your attention today to the fact that in this bill you are spending $277,000,000 to build an additional set of locks within half a mile, average, of the present locks. This means than an attack made on the present facilities of the Panama Canal would subject the additional locks to the same attack. On the other hand, by building another canal in Nicaragua from 500 to 700 miles from the present Canal we would make almost impossible the reducing of the fortifications in both places at the same time.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I would rather not.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will not the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. IZAC. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. I call especial attention to the fact that the distinguished gentleman from California is making a very interesting contribution, but the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I am a member, held hearings on the Nicaragua Canal plan. The results of those hearings show it would take from 10 to 15 years to build that canal and that the cost would be $1,600,000,000. We are faced now with the necessity of protecting the Panama Canal. We cannot wait 10 or 15 years for the building of another canal.

Mr. IZAC. I will answer the gentleman in this way: The results of the survey made by the Board of Army Engineers is contained in this booklet. I am sorry that it is almost out of print, but the gentleman can still procure a copy of it. It is entitled, "The United States Government Interoceanic Canal Board," House Document No. 139, of the Seventy-second Congress, first session. Just read that and find out what the story is. It will cost $722,000,000, including defenses, to build the Nicaragua Canal; but under the present bill you would be spending $277,000,000 and still have all your eggs in the same basket.

Mr. SIROVICH. But that testimony as to cost is not the testimony of the Army engineers.

Mr. IZAC. I am very sorry, but this is the report of the Army engineers.

Mr. SIROVICH. What year was that?

Mr. IZAC. 1931.

Mr. SIROVICH. But in the 8 years that have intervened things have changed materially as to material costs and wages.

Mr. IZAC. Let me tell my friend this: They at that time suggested that the cost of building additional locks would be somewhere near what the estimate is now; and if the estimate of building the Nicaragua Canal has been increased to $1,400,000,000 as the report says there is something funny about it. The whole story is simply this, the high command says we have got to find a way to get around this, we cannot object to a disparity of $300,000,000 or $400,000,000, we have got to show that it will cost a whole lot more. Hence their testimony this year doubling the cost of the proposed Nicaragua Canal as estimated by the Army engineers 7 years ago.

It will not cost $1,400,000,000, because Colonel Sultan and his staff who went down there and made the survey have given the figures I am giving you now. We will say that it will take 10 years to build. Undoubtedly it will take 10 years to build. Do you suppose it is going to take less time to build these locks? It will take at least 6 years and probably 8 years. That is what you are going to gain in number of years, and that is all.

I want to show you something on these charts. Here is the Panama Canal. At the present time we are taking steps to guard the eastern approach. We are building a base at Puerto Rico in the 1,000-mile circle, which will completely dominate the Caribbean Sea. On the west side we have similar islands strategically located, and we could have the same type of defense against attack on the Canal. But what are we doing? We are not even taking over the Galapagos or Cocos Islands, which would give us a listening post or observation base for our planes to guard the western approach to the Canal. Does anyone think that simply protecting the eastern approach to the Canal is doing all that we should do?

Mr. Speaker, my idea is that if we are going to spend $277,000,000 and forever forget any other canal, let us at least guard what we have down there.

I show you here a strategic map which will demonstrate how an attack by airplane carriers will be made against the Panama Canal. I show you this black sector, which is the position an enemy will assume under cover of darkness from which to launch planes for an attack on the Canal.

I am forgetting all about sabotage and things that might happen to the Canal in the meantime. Here we are with a situation like this, and we have no listening post out here where we should have one. We have not made arrangements to lease a place over here in Salvador, Guatamala, or Ecuador. This whole western approach to the Canal Zone is absolutely unprotected. Still they come in here and ask us to spend $277,000,000 when we have not yet taken advantage of the natural defenses west of the Panama Canal up to this time.

Mr. Speaker, this is no secret so I can tell it here today. An attack launched, such as I have shown here, would permit at least 50 percent of the attacking planes to get through the antiaircraft barrage, drop bombs on the locks of the Panama Canal, and get back to their airplane carriers. Everybody knows that. It is no secret. Let us do something about that before we go ahead and spend $277,000,000 to put all the eggs in the same basket.

Down here on this chart we show the Nicaragua Canal. I do not know whether that was the best place for the canal or not, but the Army engineers think so. They have a very fine report showing how feasible it would be. You can build that canal for $700,000,000 with all of the defenses so the Army engineers say. Thirty batteries of antiaircraft guns are at Panama under the Army today. At least 27 batteries are there today and 3 more expected. They cannot keep out an attack such as I have outlined here.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. Is it contemplated that the Nicaragua Canal will be at sea level or through locks?

Mr. IZAC. There is no such thing as a sea-level canal. We would still have to have the tidal locks at any place along the Isthmus an interoceanic canal is built because of the difference in tides between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. We must have some kind of locks to keep out the water. When they talk about a sea-level canal it does not mean that. If you would attempt to make the Panama Canal a sea-level canal, so-called, or a canal with only tidal locks, it would probably cost a billion and a half dollars, according to the Army engineers' figures, and consume a long period of time.

By the construction of another canal at a cost of threequarters of a billion dollars we can have two transits for the fleets, if you please, in time of war. It is admitted by everyone that an attack launched against one canal would give us ample time and protection to take care of the other one.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I distinctly asked the Army engineers myself, in view of the emergency that now exists, whether they preferred a canal through Mexico, Nicaragua, Chiriqui, or Panama, and they specifically said they wanted the Panama Canal because it can be finished within a few years, whereas a canal constructed across Nicaragua would take from 10 to 16 years and would cost $1,600,000,000 to construct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. Izac]?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, it is true it would take a little longer, but not very much longer. We are going ahead and building these 45,000-ton battleships, but we are not going to have the canal ready or the locks ready at Panama by the time the battleships are finished anyway. Originally there was a big scrap here in Congress as to where the canal should be built. Panama won. There were lots of reasons. You probably know those reasons better than I do. Nevertheless, the proper place for the canal originally was Nicaragua.

Let me give you one reason above all others. The cut at Gaillard is 494 feet from the top of the slope down to the bottom. On the Nicaragua Canal route it would have been 344 feet, a difference of 150 feet in favor of the Nicaragua Canal.

Every time you cut 1 foot it means $1,000,000, roughly. Still they insisted on going through that place, which was a tremendous cut as contrasted with the other. Not only that, but they had to make the cut at Gaillard 8¾ miles long. The cut through the east Divide at Nicaragua is 21/4 miles long, a difference of 61/2 miles. Still, some people had influence enough to get the canal built at Panama. Now that we have it I would like to see it properly taken care of and properly guarded, of course, and that is why I appeal to the House, if we are going to spend another $277,000,000 and put all our eggs in that same basket, let us do something to protect that life line of ours. We are not doing it. I defy anyone, Army or Navy, to claim that they are doing it or to assert for one moment that they are properly taking care of the defenses of the Panama Canal when they do not take over the only islands strategically placed on the west to guard that canal properly.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.
Mr. SANDAGER. May I ask the gentleman if he believes it is going to be any easier to protect two canals than to protect one canal?

Mr. IZAC. It will cost much more money to protect two canals, undoubtedly, but the fact of the matter is that if you have two defenses and the enemy reduces one you still have the other one. It is an almost certain fact that an enemy would never appear in force sufficient to reduce both fortifications at the same time, since they are about 700 miles apart on the west, although I admit that on the east they are only about 400 miles apart; but even so, you have a difference there of 400 miles from one canal to the other.

What have you between the locks? The twin locks there now at Panama are separated by a wall. One bomb destroying that wall destroys both locks. You are going to put this third set of locks from one-quarter to three-quarters of a mile distant, and that is all. Have any of you ever been on a plane leveling off on a straight line to drop bombs, and seen that bomb hit within the space of a handkerchief? Why, if you land within a quarter of a mile or three-quarters of a mile you are doing pretty good, if the enemy keeps you up high enough, and that is what experience down there has shown. In other words, when you put these locks only a half mile away or three-quarters of a mile away they are still under the same fire as if they were within a few feet of the other locks. When you get 400 miles away or 700 miles away you really have some protection, at least from that same attack.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. How much did the gentleman say the Nicaragua Canal would cost?

Mr. IZAC. Seven hundred and twenty-two million dollars, including defenses. This information is right in this little book written by the survey force. It was only 1931 when we sent the Army engineers down there, and this is the only real survey that has been made.

Mr. TERRY. Does the gentleman mean that would include the same type and quality of defense that is contemplated now for the Panama Canal?

Mr. IZAC. I cannot say as to that, because that would depend on the War Department. It would be up to the War Department to say how many batteries of antiaircraft guns, and how many 16-inch coast defense guns would be required.

Mr. TERRY. I thought the gentleman would know the cost, inasmuch as the gentleman said "including defenses."

Mr. IZAC. Those are the very words I took from the report, at the bottom of page 16, "including cost of defense." They will have to put defenses there, there is no question about it; but when those defenses are built it will make that canal practically impregnable. Certainly if they reduce that canal you can still use the Panama Canal and vice versa. And the locks contemplated for Nicaragua are big enough to take any ship built or building or which we will build probably in the next 100 years. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STARNES of Alabama to the committee amendment: On page 1, line 3, after the word "Canal" strike out the colon and insert a comma and the following: "and all such persons occupying skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, and supervisory positions shall be citizens of the United States."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to any part of the bill. The bill merely provides for the construction and does not deal with questions of labor. As I recall it, the amendment not only deals with this new portion but also with the original Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes] is not germane to the committee amendment. From a very cursory and hurried reading of the committee amendment it appears that the first part of that proviso deals with the compensation of such persons; that is, persons who may be employed on the Canal. As the Chair reads the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, it is a limitation upon the nature and character of such employees. The Chair is, therefore, of the opinion that the amendment is germane to the committee amendment, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is estimated there will be 12,000 people employed under the provisions of this bill in the Canal Zone; of this number at least 3,000 will be within the category covered by the amendment, skilled workers, administrative workers, and men and women working in a supervisory capacity. My amendment merely seeks to limit that employment to American citizens.

I cannot conceive of anyone offering a valid objection to the employment of American citizens only in these capacities on such a vital link in our national defense system. The amendment is offered purely and solely for that purpose.

At the present time we have thousands of common laborers there who are British West Indians and British subjects. It is the policy of the War Department to employ American citizens in supervisory and skilled capacities and this amendment of mine merely seeks to write that policy into positive law, and as a declaration on the part of the Congress that we want American citizens and American citizens only employed in such capacities at this vital point in our national defense.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schafer of Wisconsin as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. Starnes of Alabama to the committee amendment: Insert "Provided, That all contracts herein authorized shall be made with American citizens or with American corporations and employment preference shall be given to American citizens."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment, first, that it is not a substitute. The pending amendment relates only to labor and the other amendment deals with contracts which is entirely a different proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. This is an amendment in the third degree which is not in order as a substitute to the Starnes amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Starnes amendment.

Mr. Speaker, on the broad principle that is involved in the Starnes amendment there would appear, generally, to be no opposition, but when you come to a definition of what is skilled labor and similar conditions to be met in administration of the law, it would involve serious questions of administration and of policy so far reaching that I am not able to say just what the effect would be.

I made the statement some time ago in the course of this debate that the broad policy of labor is in the President of the United States. This is evidenced by the Executive orders that have been issued with respect to labor. First, I want to call attention to the fact that there has certainly been no effort on the part of the War Department to increase the employment of aliens. The record will show that the employment of American citizens has been uniform and constant while the employment of aliens has varied. The number of United States employees in 1916 was 3.542, and in 1937 it was 3,428. The number of aliens has varied from 32,549 in 1911 to the minimum in 1937, the last figure I have, of 10,449. As I have said, the President has the power to fix this, and there have been several Executive orders that have determined the aliens that should be employed. The first was issued on December 8, 1904, promulgated by President Theodore Roosevelt, providing that the requirements with respect to United States citizenship may be waived for applicants for positions on the Isthmus of Panama under such regulations as may be provided by the United States Civil Service.

Then there was another by Secretary of War Taft, dated February 8, 1908, that only American citizens should be employed in the higher-paid positions, except where Americans were not available for appointment. The order provided, however, that any foreigners who were then on the pay rolls would not be affected.

Then on December 23, 1908, there was an amendment, that permitted the employment of Panamanians as well as Americans in higher-paid positions.

Then on February 2, 1914, there was an Executive order, as amended, prescribing conditions of employment for the permanent force for the operation of the Canal, and containing a rule which provided that all employees who receive compensation at the rate of more than $960 a year or 40 cents an hour, must be citizens of the United States or the Republic of Panama, and such citizens will be given preference for employment in all grades. That rule provided that aliens may not be employed in such grades unless (a) they have occupied similar positions during the construction of the Canal for 2 years or more, or (b) in case of emergency, in which latter case they must be replaced by citizens of the United States or the Republic of Panama as early as practicable.

In a later Executive order, dated September 14, 1927, the Governor of the Panama Canal was authorized to increase above the limit of $960 per annum the pay of not to exceed 100 alien employees who by long and efficient service had become of greater value to the Canal organization than could be adequately compensated by the limit heretofore established.

By Executive order on August 7, 1929, the Governor was authorized to increase above the limit of $960 per annum the pay of not to exceed 12 alien employees in the positions of steward, chef, baker, and head waiter in the employ of the Hotel Washington and the Hotel Tivoli, but a maximum list of $1,500 per annum was placed on the pay in such excepted positions.

Aliens receiving compensation in excess of $960 per annum number 245, all of whom have been employed in conformity with the provisions of the above orders. The great mass of the alien employees are receiving rates of pay ranging from $22.50 to $80 per month, with an average of $55 per month. There are about 10,000 of these native workmen. The number fluctuates considerably, according to the labor demands, particularly in such work as stevedoring, bunkering vessels with coal, repairs to vessels, building construction, and municipal work, in which there may be variations from day to day or according to weather conditions. One of the reasons for the employment of these native workmen which form the mass of the unskilled and semiskilled laborers in the Canal Zone is that there is a constant reserve of such labor in the cities of Panama and Colon. Thoroughly acclimated to the Tropics and paid at the general level of compensation for such labor in nearby countries. Today the President of the United States has the power to determine the employment of these people and to reduce the number of aliens employed. It is variable, and I appeal to you in dealing with an important question like the defense of America, not to write rigid provisions in the law, but to rely upon your efforts and the patriotism and the honesty of the President to take care of the situation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I cannot yield in 5 minutes. Then, as I said awhile ago, you have to take into consideration the health conditions. Do you know that even with the United States Army, they are permitted to remain in the territory of Panama for only 2 years? Why? Because of the danger of insanity and other troubles.

Mr. SIROVICH. And typhoid.

Mr. BLAND. And typhoid, on account of the heat, and tropical causes which have made it necessary to bring back United States citizens every 2 years. You are imposing additional burdens upon the work of doing work that is for the national defense and must proceed at once. I am asking for additional facilities. The War Department is asking for additional facilities, and the President of the United States is asking for these additional facilities. We should have something there for protection if bombs come from the air. You will have locks there, according to the construction plan, which are going to be bomb proof, as nearly as it is possible to make them bomb proof. They will take care of the largest ship that may be provided for the United States Navy. They will be protected, as far as humanly possible, from sabotage. Let us work out the salutary purpose that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes] has in view by a resolution brought before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, studied by that committee, and seeking to provide a general policy of law rather than by dealing with a condition which you cannot meet by legislation here at this time and in this hour. I promise the gentleman he will have a complete hearing. What are you going to do for your reservoir of American labor down there? It does not exist. I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. Should the pending Starnes amendment be defeated, I hope that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bland] will accept my amendment, which I shall reoffer. As he stated, this is a question of national defense. My amendment provides that all contracts authorized shall be made with American citizens or American corporations and that employment preference shall be given to American citizens. Under my amendment, which is not as drastic and restrictive, insofar as employment is concerned, as the Starnes amendment, the agency which employs these thousands of additional people will have considerable leeway. I do not see why, with 12,000,000 American citizens unable to find jobs through no fault of their own, the Congress should hesitate in voting into the bill which carries a potential appropriation from the American Treasury of $277,000,000, a provision to give some of the 12,000,000 unemployed American citizens an employment preference. My amendment will also insure that American business institutions will obtain the contracts which will be paid for by taxes collected from American taxpayers. This will furnish employment to many thousand Americans in our American business institutions. I sincerely hope that if the Starnes amendment is defeated, we will put the brand of "America first" in this $277,000,000 national-defense measure by incorporating my amendment, with the vote of the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bland], for whom we all have the greatest admiration and affection. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dirksen) there were—ayes 24, noes 29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the pending amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schafer of Wisconsin to the amendment offered by Mr. Bland: At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. Bland insert: "Provided, That all contracts herein authorized shall be made with American citizens, or with American corporations, and employment preference shall be given to American citizens.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that amendment that I made against the Starnes amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the opinions expressed on the ruling in the Starnes amendment apply to this amendment and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, we have 12,000,000 people in America who are unable to find jobs, through no fault of their own. Our Federal taxpayers' Treasury is almost bankrupt. This bill provides for an eventual appropriation of $277,000,000, which is to be produced by and collected from our American taxpayers. This is an American national-defense measure. It is fitting that we should employ Americans on the project, so far as possible, in view of the fact that about 12,000,000 of our people cannot get a job, through no fault of their own.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand the gentleman's amendment provides that such equipment as may be used for the construction work and building the locks—

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Absolutely; $277,000,000 will be expended on this project from our American tax-payers' Treasury.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What reason does the gentleman think anybody could give for not supporting an amendment of that kind?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. They cannot give any reason, unless they want to follow a friendly neighbor policy and raid the American taxpayers' Treasury of $276,000,000 to furnish contracts and employment for non-Americans.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Who in Latin America could supply the equipment, if anyone, and if we do not buy it from the Latin American countries, then we will have to go to England or France or get it from Germany or Italy. We can produce all of this equipment in America. When we manufacture this equipment in America we will furnish jobs to Americans in many of our factories which are now working about 50 percent of their capacity.

I think the gentleman's amendment is very good.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I appreciate his contribution and support of my amendment.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee that he opposed the Starnes amendment because it was too restrictive and would interfere with the employment program, I respectfully call to his attention that my amendment is not as restrictive. My amendment, insofar as employment restrictions are concerned, only provides that preference shall be given to American citizens. Should American citizens, of whom there are now 12,000,000 who cannot find jobs, who must pay for this $277,000,000 project, express their intention that they want to work on it, they should not be denied that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, this is a $277,000,000 American nationaldefense measure. The American taxpayers foot the bill. Americans should receive the contracts as well as employment on the project. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I called attention a few moments ago to the conditions which prevailed in the Panama Canal, especially as to health. Remember you are dealing now with a reservoir of unskilled labor. There will be fluctuation. First, there is no habitation; no place for them to live. What will be done to take care of them in the time that they are doing this work? Many of the insurance companies, according to the testimony that appeared before the committee on another bill, do no business in the Panama Canal Zone. They consider the health risk too great. Those who do business there charge a higher assessment, in addition to the normal rate.

One gentleman interested in labor has been urging these amendments, and I call attention to the evidence which he introduced on another bill before the committee, coming from Surgeon General Patterson, of the United States Army:

Residence in the tropic regions at or near the sea level is unfavorable to the health of northern races. Among the things which may exercise deleterious effects may be cited, the temperature * * * the humidity * * * exposure to actinic rays * * * absence of normal sources of companionship and amusement, resulting in mental depressions * * * lack of exercise, and excessive indulgence in food, alcohol, and venery * * * association with natives * * * in my opinion nobody * * * no white man * * * lives in the Tropics over a long period who does not deteriorate in practically every way.

Now, you are dealing not with a normal condition on the Panama Canal, but you are dealing with an abnormal condition which will exist in the construction of new locks, additional locks, some half mile or more away, with no accommodations made to take care of them; no quarters provided for them; no way of segregation from the rest of the population, exposing them to disease, and without a reservoir on which you can draw if these men remain there only a short time. You may have the turn-over which you had in the original construction of the Panama Canal.

I have shown that the matter of this employment is in the broad power of the President of the United States. I am sure that with him and everyone else there will be every desire, as far as is possible, to use American labor, but that will be on the skilled and technical work; not on the unskilled work. You are subjecting your Americans to that which they and many of us here do not understand. I felt as many here do until I went to Panama in 1936 immediately after the jurisdiction of legislation of this kind was transferred to my committee.

Gentlemen, it is a subject that involves international relations with Panama itself. If we are going to finish these locks in about 6 years in order that they may be ready to accommodate the larger ships that go through, then we must have a reservoir of labor in Panama upon which we can draw and that we know will be certain, a reservoir of labor that is acclimated to the hardships of that climate, and not take a chance like this.

Further, Mr. Speaker, who knows, in the troubled conditions throughout the world, how soon we may need these locks. I hope there may be no trouble, but we wish to make the Panama Canal as safe as possible and as soon as possible. We cannot afford to delay. Just now, if a bomb were to fall in those locks of the present Panama Canal, the results might be serious. We must have these additional facilities, bombproof and safely guarded, as soon as they can be built, so that America need not spend the money that would be required to build up a navy for each ocean.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that this amendment be voted down. Under authority granted to me to extend and revise my remarks, I wish to remind the House again that the President—not the Governor—has control of the situation. Existing law provides that all persons, other than the Governor of the Panama Canal, necessary for the care, management, maintenance, sanitation, government, operation, and protection of the Canal and Canal Zone, shall (a) be appointed by the President or by his authority; (b) be removable at the pleasure of the President; (c) receive such compensation as shall be fixed by the President or by his authority until such time as Congress may by law regulate the same; and such persons shall be employed and shall serve under such conditions of employment, including matters relative to transportation, medical care, quarters, leave and the commutation thereof, and office hours and hours of labor, as have been or shall hereafter be prescribed by the President.

Surely the President of the United States has in his record shown himself to be worthy of this trust, and all may know that if a change should be made, he will make it.

Any change in the employment policies of the Panama Canal should not be made without full investigation, complete study, and careful analysis of possible results. They can be made at any time by Executive order of the President.

The Governor of the Panama Canal estimates that the cost might approximate $81,000,000. The change in this way would have a most undesirable effect upon the permanent organization of the Panama Canal and upon the American workers themselves, and would result in an inevitable delay in the prosecution and completion of this most important defense project.

Careful preparation would be required to take care of such a large influx of United States citizens.

Governor Ridley has pointed out that these laborers must be seasoned and must be acclimated to the extreme rigors of the Tropics. He says that Americans cannot perform labor in the enervating climate of the Tropics, and it would be folly to provide by law that they must be used exclusively on this project. He says that he has not the slightest doubt that the result would be disastrous not only so far as concerns the carrying out of the project but as concerns the health and welfare of the workmen themselves. He says that our experience during the construction of the Canal, our quarter century of experience in its operations, and the experience of private contractors in large projects in tropical latitudes everywhere in the world conclusively prove that an attempt to utilize only American labor on the contemplated project would be doomed to failure in advance and would be a wholly inexcusable disregard of the costly lessons of expe-

It must be remembered that the existing facilities of the Canal Zone are sufficient only for those persons now actually engaged in the enterprise. There are no private housing facilities, and the schools, commissaries, and other utilities are adequate only for the regular organizations. While it would be relatively simple to provide construction quarters and other necessary facilities for the native workmen who would reside in the Canal Zone, problems of great magnitude would be involved in attempting to provide suitable facilities for many thousands of laborers and their families and would involve costly expenditures which would not be warranted on a comparatively short-time construction project.

There is pending on the Calendar of the House a bill introduced by me at the request of Mr. Hushing, the purpose of which is to amend the Canal Zone Code so as to provide more liberal retirement for American employees on the Panama Canal, because of the hardships, dangers to health, and effects of service in the Canal Zone. My committee reported that bill favorably. I wish any who may have any doubt as to the effect of service in Panama upon American citizens to read that report and the hearing held March 28, 1939, on the following bills: H. R. 141, a bill to amend the Canal Zone Code so as to provide for 30-year optional retirement; H. R. 142, a bill to amend the Canal Zone Code so as to provide for widows' annuities; and H. R. 1819, a bill to amend section 92, title 2, of the Canal Zone Code, and for other purposes.

Anyone who will read the hearings and particularly the testimony of Mr. W. C. Hushing, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, will not hesitate to vote down this amendment.

I urge that those desiring information on this subject read also the hearings held by my committee on March 21, 1939, on H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, and H. R. 3821.

I welcome a resolution for the study of these questions. If none is introduced, I will introduce one myself to that end, and before the Congress meets again I hope to visit Panama to consider the problems further.

Under the leave to extend and revise my remarks, I hope later to extend some remarks on this subject in the Appendix of the RECORD, so that all interested may have knowledge of the magnitude of the problems involved on which I have barely touched.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were-ayes 35, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the first session of the Seventysixth Congress is about to adjourn. Like the seven preceding sessions which I have had the honor and privilege of attending, some desirable and beneficial legislation has been enacted. But the forces of reaction are more firmly than ever entrenched in the Halls of Congress, opposing and preventing even consideration of progressive and necessary measures.

During the first term of the present administration it was the Supreme Court which, by its failure or refusal to interpret and apply the Constitution in the light of modern conditions and demands, prevented reform and thus delayed permanent recovery. I have long contended that the Federal courts have usurped the functions of a coordinate branch of the Government, the legislative. Neither is there time nor is it necessary at the present moment to give facts to prove that the Constitution clearly authorizes the Congress to make laws and delegates the power to try cases under those laws to the Federal courts but certainly never intended those courts to declare them unconstitutional and tear them up. The pages of the Congressional Record for 1933, 1934, and 1935 are replete with arguments for and against the proposition.

As far back as 1920 I predicted that some day a progressive President would appoint progressive members of the Supreme Court, and then we would hear the criticisms and bemoanings of the conservative elements of our country. The President in 1937 failed in his attempt to "unpack" a conservative court by the same constitutional method used by the second Republican President in our history, Ulysses S. Grant. But some of the Justices completely reversed themselves on minimum wages for women, the interstatecommerce clause, and other vital issues, and other conservative Justices resigned, making room for the appointment of men with forward-looking ideas and ideals. We now have a progressive Supreme Court, and the inevitable has happened. A Mr. Hogan of Doheny and Secretary Fall oil scandal fame has publicly denounced the august Supreme Court of the United States. And why, pray? Because, forsooth, it does not now interpret the Constitution so as to favor his special interests.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a news item from the United Press of July 10, with reference to the statement of Mr. Hogan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

COURT MAKES LAW, BAR HEAD DECLARES

San Francisco, July 10.—The Supreme Court no longer preserves constitutional liberties, Frank J. Hogan, president of the American Bar Association, said today in opening the association's sixty-second annual convention.

He said the present Court has reversed constitutional doctrines and "established" principles and, therefore, the legislative branch of government would have to protect the people against "arbitrary exercise of power."

He praised Justices James Clark McReynolds and Pierce Butler for

He praised Justices James Clark McReynolds and Pierce Butler for "courageous efforts to preserve landmark after landmark of the law," and to stop "the procession of precedents to the graveyard."

Mr. Hogan said there had been a curtaliment of States' rights through the Court's interpretation of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. Continuing, he said:

"It is to this expansion of the power of the General Government over practically every branch of human industry that I direct attention in the hope that my feeble voice may contribute to its recognition by the people whose liberties are involved in the exercise of such power."

CONFUSES LAWYERS

In its last two terms the Court affirmed 135 cases and reversed 175. There were 199 dissenting opinions. "These figures indicate the extent to which the reconstructed Court has undertaken to disavow and discard old doctrines and to declare new principles and new concepts," he said.

"The plain result of all this is that no lawyer can safely advise his client what the law is; no businessman, no farmer, can know whether or not he is breaking the law, for if he follows established principles he is likely to be doing exactly that.

"What was a constitutional principle yesterday may be a dis-carded doctrine tomorrow, and this, all this, is what has been so often proudly proclaimed to be a government of laws and not of

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the Court is now giving decisions favoring my point of view, I still insist that it is usurping the functions of another constitutional branch of the Federal Government and agree with the gentleman from Washington, D. C., that Congress should reassume its power and authority to make the laws the same as the Parliament of Great Britain and the House of Deputies in France. Then we can let the people, the real sovereigns in this Republic, take care of the Members of the House and Senate at the next election. That is democracy. I have never had any fear of the common people, even when they have temporarily disagreed with my view-

During this second term of the present administration, with the Supreme Court more or less in accord with its policies, a coalition of conservative Republicans and Democrats have dominated the scene and obstructed or retarded progressive legislation. Witness the delay in enacting the wages-and-hours law. Despite the cry for harmony, I, for one, will not shut my eyes to the stark and naked truth that reactionary Democrats have all through this present session joined hands with the Republicans in either preventing New Deal policies and legislation from coming up for consideration or defeating it if forced to the floor of the House. All for the purpose of discrediting the present administration. Some of us have voted against the President on occasion, at times when it was very unpopular to do so, as, for instance, the so-called economy bill of March 1933 and the neutrality bill of recent date. But we have conscientiously done so as a matter of principle, a reasonable difference of opinion and judgment. But too many so-called Democrats have, and are, sabotaging the whole New Deal program and policies from personal hatred and bitterness toward the present occupant of the White House. This is neither statesmanlike nor commendable.

I reiterate what I have stated time and again on the floor of this House. Let the conservative Democrats and Republicans, honest as they may be in their convictions, join hands and form their party. Then let us liberal Democrats. Republicans, and Progressives unite in an opposition party and let us fight it out openly and frankly and let the people of the United States decide what they want. [Applause.] To most candid observers it would seem best that the former retain the name "Republican" and the latter retain the name "Democrat." This would be fair to the voters of this country; it would be fair to us who serve. In my humble opinion, it would be tragic for us to win in 1940 with the conservative Democratic tail wagging the liberal Democratic dog. We would be in the same impotent impasse that we are in at the present time. We spend a whole day discussing the acceptance of a Roosevelt library when it could be more profitably spent in discussing a cost-of-production bill for agriculture, which must be enacted before that large group can ever have the purchasing power it deserves. We spend 2 days debating antialien bills, which have the label of patriotism but contain the essence of the old alien and sedition laws of the Whig days.

I voted against the Smith bill and have no apologies to offer. A careful reading of the bill will show that it selects certain dangerous groups for deportation and refusal of entry, and excepts others just as dangerous to our form of government. An amendment by the gentleman from Colorado, Congressman John Martin, to add the names "Communist, Nazi, and Fascist" after the word "anarchists" as subject to refusal of entry to this country was strongly opposed by the proponents of the Smith bill and decisively defeated by the majority which enacted the law. I despise and denounce all three of these subversive forms of government and am skeptical of that patriotism which distinguishes between them.

There is reason to believe there are members of the Silver Shirts right here on the floor of the House—at least those who sympathize with them. If there is anyone here who would rather wear a red shirt, or a silver shirt, or a black shirt, than a khaki shirt, let him go to Russia, Germany, or Italy and sit at the feet of Stalin, Hitler, or Mussolini. If there is anyone within the sound of my voice who would rather salute the hammer and sickle, the swastika, or the fasces and ax than make obeisance to Old Glory, he is not fit to be a citizen of the United States, much less a Member of this House of Representatives. Some of you want to fingerprint the aliens. That is a very laudable proposition. But may I respectfully suggest that you propose a law or a rule of this body that every Member declare that he is neither a member of nor in sympathy with communism, fascism, or nazi-ism. Let us begin by fingerprinting the membership of this House. I quote, "The honest men will not object; the dishonest ones should be forced to submit."

As I observed above, 2 days were spent in consideration of the antialien bill, yet monetary bills restoring the function of "coining money and regulating the value thereof" back to Congress, where it constitutionally belongs, cannot even be brought out of the committee room.

In conclusion may I say that, until real farm legislation restoring the purchasing power of that large group is enacted, until all our unemployed who can work are given permanent positions at decent living wages, thereby restoring purchasing power of that second large group, until the money problem is so solved as to get into free and constant circulation at the bottom of the economic pyramid through adequate old-age pensions, as well as the other two methods just mentioned—until this is done we can have no real recovery nor permanent prosperity. When this is done our country filled with employed and contented citizens will be a most sterile field for propagation of alien ideas and foreign "isms." This is our job as Congressmen, and I must say we have woefully failed in our duty.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. Does the gentleman know that approximately 200 Members of this House who are members of military organizations have already been fingerprinted?

Mr. HILL. Members of what organizations?

Mr. THORKELSON. They are ex-service men or men who are now members of our Reserve forces. They have all been fingerprinted.

Mr. HILL. I would suggest that that is a good thing. [Applause.]

5171. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Resolution of the Washington State Grange, passed at annual session at Vancouver, Wash., Harry Cheek, secretary, asserting that it will be necessary for the public-utility districts, formed for the purpose of distributing electrical power and to whom the Federal Government has loaned money for the purpose of constructing Rural Electrification Administration lines and engaging in the electric business, to purchase private utilities in order to facilitate an economic distribution of such electricity; therefore favoring Federal loans to public-utility districts for the purchase and acquisition of privately owned facilities; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

the Committee on Banking and Currency.

5174. Also, resolution of the Washington State Grange. passed at annual session at Vancouver, Wash., Harry Cheek, secretary, pointing out that State officials are without adequate power to act against the private power companies who set up "phoney" organizations within States to cover part of their expenditures during campaigns against public ownership, as the organization directing such campaigns and the records necessary for action by State officials may be outside the State affected; therefore urging that Congress enact a law giving the Federal Power Commission authority to interfere when a great sum of money, in excess of a reasonable amount, is being spent in campaigns against public ownership, and where threats and intimidation are used to influence voters; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5175. Also, resolution of the Washington State Grange, passed at annual session at Vancouver, Wash., Harry Cheek, secretary, urging the enactment of a law by Congress that would compel a majority vote of all eligible voters of the United States before the United States could enter into an armed conflict on foreign soil; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1940 RELIEF ACT

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a petition from Hon. Don C. McCombs, mayor of the city of Kansas City, Kans., approved by the Board of Commissioners, and duly attested by Howard Payne, city clerk, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter or petition was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF KANSAS CITY, KANS., DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND REVENUE, July 26, 1939.

Senator Arthur Capper, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Honorable Sir. In the interest of a more just provision for the needs of the unemployed, we earnestly petition you to work and vote for the following changes in the 1940 Relief Act:

1. Restore the prevailing hourly wages on all W. P. A. jobs.

2. Increase the monthly wages in the South, but without cutting wages in the North and West.

3. Stop arbitrary lay-off of hundreds of thousands of W. P. A.

workers; give the President power to adjust the funds as needed.
4. Repeal the 30-day lay-off provision.
5. Restore the arts projects.
Only by making these changes can suffering be reduced among the unemployed and the States and counties be enabled to give at least some help to those others on direct relief who are unable to work or cannot find jobs. Respectfully yours, DON C. McCombs, Mayor Approved by Board of Commissioners of the City of Kansas City, Kans., July 24, 1939.

HOWARD PAYNE, City Clerk.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to state that I believe a serious mistake was made by Congress in striking the prevailing-wage provision from the W. P. A. Appropriation Act. I voted to retain it; I also voted to restore the prevailing wage when it was offered as an amendment to the lending bill in the Senate last week, as also did my colleague from Kansas, Senator REED. May I express the hope that this and other injustices contained in the work-relief legislation enacted at this session will be corrected at the next session of Congress.

CIVIL SERVICE ELIGIBILITY OF VETERANS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred, a resolution adopted by the Lone Star Chapter of Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Austin, Tex., relating to House bill 5101.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill designated H. R. 5101, by Mr. STARNES of Alabama, relating to the civil-service eligibility of veterans; and

Whereas section 4 of said act provides that all disabled veterans, widows, and preference wives would have to make a passing grade of 70 before being allowed the present 10-percent disability allowance, which is 60 for passing; and which is 60 for passing; and

Whereas the said provision is unfair and unjust to the disabled veterans and would affect some 17 percent of such disabled veterans who heretofore passed with a 60 to 70 grade and would mean a loss of several thousand positions for disabled veterans: Therefore be it Resolved by the Lone Star Chapter, No. 4, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Austin, Tex., that the said chapter is unalterably opposed to the passage of the said bill; and be it further Resolved by the said chapter that a copy of this resolution be presented to Committee on the Civil Service, both of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate, and to United States Senators Sheppard and Connally of Texas, and Congressman Lyndon Johnson with a request that they do all in their power to prevent this measure being enacted into law; and be it further Resolved, That the said chapter favors the passage of the act entitled "H. R. 5147," also introduced by Mr. Starnes of Alabama, relating to civil-service eligibility for veterans and respectfully relating to civil-service eligibility for veterans and respectfully solicits the support of Senators Sheppard and Connally and Congressman Lyndon Johnson for said measure.

GAMBLING SHIPS

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram from Earl Warren, attorney general, dated at Los Angeles, Calif., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Los Angeles, Calif., July 28, 1939.

Hon. H. F. ASHURST,

Hon. H. F. ASHURST,

Chairman, Judiciary Committee,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your favorable consideration of gambling-ship legislation is earnestly requested. California with approximately 1,000 miles of shore line is particularly vulnerable to the activities of such ships which have no other purpose than to nullify the State laws against illegal gambling. By anchoring more than 3 miles from shore they create jurisdictional as well as practical problems of enforcement. State and local authorities are now engaged in attempting to overcome these difficulties, but a Federal statute such as that proposed come these difficulties, but a Federal statute such as that proposed would automatically eliminate the source of trouble. Should you desire information concerning the scope of activities or any other assistance this office will gladly comply.

EARL WARREN, Attorney General.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN HYDROELECTRIC AND RECLAMATION PROJECTS IN NEBRASKA

Mr. BRIDGES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 179), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the Public Works Administration has committed the Federal Government to the construction of three hydroelectric and reclamation projects in the State of Nebraska, commonly known as the Loup River project, the Central Valley project, and the Platte River project; and

Whereas investigations and studies by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, by the Reclamation Bureau, and, in the case of the Central Valley project, by the Public Works Administra-tion engineers, had adversely reported on these projects as imprac-ticable from the standpoint both of sound engineering and sound economics; and

Whereas the Central Valley project was authorized with the full knowledge of the Public Works Administration that the waters to be diverted from the Platte River had already been overappropriated by water users within the watershed of the Platte Valley; and

Whereas the stream bed below the site of the Kingsley Dam (now under construction) was on July 27, 1939, entirely dry for a stretch of more than 100 miles, and that the same stream was entirely dry at this stretch for 222 consecutive days in a recent year; and

Whereas to further Federal power and jurisdiction over the Platte River the Federal Power Commission has claimed jurisdiction over this dry western stream on the absurd fiction that it is navigable; and

Whereas the Kingsley Dam, planned to be the second largest earth-filled dam in the world, will have a storage capacity of 2,000,000 acre-feet of water while the total average discharge of the river at that point is recorded as 1,500,000 acre-feet; and

Whereas the Loup River project was undertaken soon after an adverse report by the Corps of Engineers on engineering and economic grounds, which have since been amply justified; and

Whereas seepage, silt, and ice conditions, erratic stream flow, lack of market for electric energy, and other faults give cause for grave concern that many millions of dollars have been squandered in the face of official adverse reports; and

Whereas political considerations may have controlled the granting of funds for these projects, according to widely spread and never denied charges, particularly as to the peculiar circumstances sur-rounding the authorizations for the Central Valley project; and

Whereas numerous charges of discrimination against water users; unduly high commissions to banking interests; of coercion of local participants; of favoritism to engineering firms composed of former Nebraska employees of the Public Works Administration; of coercion of the local boards and authorities in charge of the projects by the Public Works Administration or its field representatives; of lawless infringement of State water laws; of unsound financing; of poor construction and engineering; of incompetence and inefficiency; of lobbying in the State legislature; of false and misleading propaganda and pressure on local newspapers; of unwholesome political activity; and

Whereas the conditions set forth above, if true, create a situation of grave concern to the Nation, threatening the orderly processes of law and of government, destructive of local self-government, establishing a bureaucratic supergovernment within the framework of democratic forms which might prove dangerous to the continuance of free democracy if established in the Nation: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Senate Commerce Committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a complete study of and report to the Senate upon all of the matters referred to in this resolution and any other matters pertinent to such an inquiry, this resolution and any other matters pertinent to such an inquiry, with a special view to making specific recommendations for necessary remedial legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That for the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold public hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate during the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses; to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expense of the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee, hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expense of the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 77 OF BANKRUPTCY ACT AS TO PREFERRED CLAIMS

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 2654, to amend subsection (n), section 77, of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, concerning payment of preferred claims, was passed yesterday be reconsidered for the purpose of striking from the bill two amendments which were adopted inadvertently, the last two amendments in the bill. I have the consent of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burke], who composed the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, which reported the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Senate accepted and passed Senate bill 2654 as so amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is now on the amendment on page 2, line 4.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

SALE OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2904.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2904) to provide for the sale under certain conditions of agricultural commodities held by the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The bill is as follows:

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation, upon terms, conditions, and in quantities prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and approved by the President, is authorized to sell surplus agricultural commodities, acquired by such corporation through its loan operations, to foreign governments on the condition that, except for rotation to prevent deterioration, such commodities shall be held in reserve by such governments for a period of not less than 5 years from the date of acquisition, and shall not be disposed of unless a war or war emergency results in a serious interruption of normal supplies of such commodities: Provided, That under this act no concession below the prevailing world market price for the unrestricted use of such commodities, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be granted, in consideration of the obligation assumed by such governments to hold such commodities in reserve as required hereinbefore, in excess of a maximum amount equal to the carrying charges, as estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture, that would be incurred if such commodities should be held for an additional 18 months' period by the Commodity Credit Corporation.

PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES (S. DOC. NO. 105

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Because there have been so many misrepresentations, some unpremeditated, some deliberate, in regard to the attitude of the executive branch of the Government in relation to Senate bill 1871, "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," and because a number of questions have been raised as to the meaning and application of some of its provisions, I deem it advisable at the time of Executive approval to make certain observations to the Congress of the United States.

The genesis of this legislation lies in the message of the President of January 5, 1939, respecting an additional appropriation for the Works Progress Administration. I said in that message:

It is my belief that improper political practices can be eliminated only by the imposition of rigid statutory regulations and penalties by the Congress, and that this should be done. Such penalties should be imposed not only upon persons within the administrative organization of the Works Progress Administration but also upon outsiders who have in fact in many instances been the principal offenders in this regard. My only reservation in this matter is that no legislation should be enacted which will in any way deprive workers on the Works Progress Administration program of the civil rights to which they are entitled in common with other citizens.

Furthermore, in applying to all employees of the Federal Government (with a few exceptions) the rules to which the civil-service employees have been subject for many years, this measure is in harmony with the policy that I have consistently advocated during all my public life, namely, the wider extension of civil service as opposed to its curtailment.

It is worth noting that nearly all exemptions from the civil service which have been made during the past six years and a half have originated in the Congress itself and not in the Executive.

Furthermore, it is well known that I have consistently advocated the objectives of the present bill. It has been currently suggested that partisan political reasons have entered largely into the passage of the bill: but with this I am not concerned, because it is my hope that if properly administered the measure can be made an effective instrument of good government.

As is usual with all bills passed by the Congress, this bill has been examined, on its receipt at the Executive Offices, by the appropriate departments or agencies, in this case the Attorney General of the United States and the Civil Service Commission.

The Attorney General has advised me that it seems clear that the Federal Government has the power to prescribe as qualifications for its employees that they refrain from taking part in other endeavors which, in the light of common experience, may well consume time and attention required by their duties as public officials. He points out, however, that such qualifications cannot properly preclude Government employees from the exercise of the right of free speech or from their right to exercise the franchise.

The question of constitutionality being resolved in favor of the bill, our next inquiry relates to the exercise and preservation of these rights. It is obvious that the intent of the bill is to follow broadly the provisions of civil-service regulations that have existed for many years in regard to political activities of Federal employees.

It is because I have received and will continue to receive so many queries asking what a Government employee may or may not do that it seems appropriate at the outset to postulate the broad principle that if the bill is administered in accord with its spirit, and if it is in the future administered without abuse, oppression, or groundless fear, it will serve the purpose intended by the Congress.

For example, I have been asked by employees of the Government whether under this law they would lose their positions if they merely attend political meetings. The answer is, of course, "No."

I have been asked whether they would lose their positions if they contributed voluntarily to party or individual campaign funds without being solicited. The answer is, of course "No."

I have been asked whether they would lose their positions if they should merely express their opinion or preference publicly—orally, by radio, or in writing—without doing so as part of an organized political campaign. The answer is "No."

I have been asked if citizens who have received loans from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, from the Farm Credit Administration or its subsidiaries, from the Farm Security Administration, from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and other Government lending agencies, would be subject to the terms of this bill. The answer is "No."

I have been asked whether farmers receiving farm benefits would be bound by the terms of the bill. Again the answer is "No."

I have been asked if Government employees who belong to Young Republican Clubs, Young Democratic Clubs, Civil Service Reform Associations, the League of Women Voters, the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and similar bodies are subject to the penalties of the measure because of mere membership in these organizations. The answer is "No."

There will be hundreds of similar questions raised in the actual administration and enforcement of this bill. Such questions will be asked in most cases by individuals in good faith. And it is only fair that they should receive an answer. I am, therefore, asking the Attorney General to take the necessary steps through the new civil-liberties unit of the Department of Justice in order that the civil rights of every Government employee may be duly protected and that the element of fear may be removed.

I have been asked if the bill applies to veterans—Civil War, Indian wars, the War with Spain, the World War—retired officers and men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who, though not Government employees, are receiving benefits or pensions of one kind or another. The answer is, of course, "No."

I have been asked if the act applies to those who get Government benefits under the Social Security Act in the form of old-age pensions or in the form of unemployment compensation. The answer is "No."

Finally, I have been asked various questions relating to the right of a Government employee publicly to answer unwarranted attacks made on him or on his work or on the work of his superiors or on the work of his subordinates, notwithstanding the fact that such attacks or misrepresentations were made for political purposes by newspapers or by individuals as a part of a political campaign.

This raises the interesting question as to whether all Government officials except the President and Vice President, persons in the office of the President, heads and assistant heads of executive departments and policy-determining officers appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, must remain mute if and when they or the work with which they are concerned are attacked and misrepresented in a political campaign or preliminary thereto.

It will be noted that the language of the bill wholly excludes members or employees of the legislative branch of the Government from its operation.

It can hardly be maintained that it is an American way of doing things to allow newspapers, magazines, radio broadcasters, Members and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, and all kinds of candidates for public office and their friends to make any form of charge, misrepresentation, falsification, or vituperation against the acts of any individual or group of individuals employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government with complete immunity against reply except by a handful of high executive officials. That, I repeat, would be un-American because it would be unfair, and the great mass of Americans like fair play and insist on it. They do not stand for any gag act.

It is, therefore, my considered opinion, in which the Attorney General of the United States joins me, that all Federal employees, from the highest to the lowest, have the right publicly to answer any attack or misrepresentation, provided, of course, they do not make such reply as part of active participation in political campaigns.

The same definition of fair and proper administration of the bill applies to the right of any Government employee, from the highest to the lowest, to give to the public factual information relating to the conduct of Government affairs. To rule otherwise would make it impossible for the people of the United States to learn from those who serve the Government vital, necessary, and interesting facts relating to the manifold activities of the Federal Government. To rule otherwise would give a monopoly to originate and disseminate information to those who, primarily for political purposes, unfortunately have been given to the spreading of false information. That again is unfair and, therefore, un-American.

It is, I am confident, the purpose of the proponents of this legislation that the new law be thus administered so that the right of free speech will remain, even to those who serve their Government; and that the Government itself shall have full right to place all facts in its possession before the public. If some future administration should undertake to administer this legislation to the detriment of these rights, such action would be contrary to the purpose of the act itself and might well infringe the constitutional rights of citizens. I trust that public vigilance will for all time prevent this.

The Attorney General calls my attention to a practical difficulty which should be corrected by additional legislation as soon as possible. For many years there has been an exception to the civil-service regulations whereby employees permanently residing in the District of Columbia or in municipalities adjacent thereto may become candidates for or hold municipal office in their municipalities. This and a few similar exceptions should, I believe, be maintained.

The other question relates to the fact that the bill does not in any way cover the multitude of State and local employees who greatly outnumber Federal employees and who may continue to take part in elections in which there are candidates for Federal office on the same ballot with candidates for State and local office. It is held by many who have examined the constitutional question that because the Congress, under the Constitution, may maintain the integrity of Federal elections, it has the power to extend the objectives of this bill so as to cover State and local government employees who participate actively in Federal elections. This is at least worth the study of the Congress at its next session and therefore before the next Federal election.

It is because for so many years I have striven in public life and in private life for decency in political campaigns, both on the part of government servants, of candidates, of newspapers, of corporations, and of individuals that I regard this new legislation as at least a step in the right direction.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1939.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message from the President will lie on the table, unless the Senator from Vermont has some motion he wishes to make.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to comment on the message from the President.

Mr. President, it is a matter of gratification that the President has signed and signified his approval of the Hatch bill. I believe that among the great principles in which the people of the United States have been concerned, and about which they have been apprehensive, is the purity or the sanctity of their ballot, and the right to exercise it, free from coercion. I think it is notable that the President makes the claim, as follows:

The genesis of this legislation lies in the message of the President of January 5, 1939.

And so forth. Without derogating more than necessarily from the credit which obviously the President of the United States now attempts to gain by assenting to this act, I simply call the attention of the Senate to the RECORD of June 2, 1938, page 8000, where there is recorded an earlier indication of the theory which is carried into effect by agreement to this act of the Congress. There appears the record of the action taken by the Senate on Senator HATCH's amendment to House Joint Resolution 679, the Relief and Work Relief Appropriation Act of 1938.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have transcribed into the RECORD a true copy of the amendment then offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] on which the vote was—yeas 37, nays 40.

On the following day—that is, June 3, 1938—there occurred events, recorded at page 8140 of the RECORD, which show that the genesis of the act recently approved was a long time prior to January 5, 1939, and from an entirely different source, which I think does not deserve the charge or the reflection of being in any degree partisan, for the amendment which then was acted upon by the Senate came from this side of the The one to which I first alluded came from the Democratic side of the aisle. The other amendment came from the Republican side of the aisle. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the amendment there recorded to House Joint Resolution 679, the Relief and Work Relief Appropriation Act of 1938.

I read only a part of it to show the striking similarity between the proposals then made and the measure which was assented to so recently by the President:

SEC. (a) No part of any appropriation in this act shall be used for any political purpose, and no authority conferred by this act upon any person shall be exercised or administered for any

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds appropriated by this act to use or threaten to use his official authority or influence for any of the following purposes:

Then there are several purposes enumerated, beginning

(1) To interfere with, restrain, or coerce any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any primary or other election.

And it concludes with a penalty:

(f) Any person who violates any provision of this section shall be punished, if such person is an individual, by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 3 years, or both, and in all other cases by a fine of not more than $25,000.

Mr. President, I leave it safely in the hands of the Senate to judge whether this act is a political or nonpolitical act in the sense of partisanship. The question of who should have the credit matters not at all. The important fact is that we have now in effect a law which denounces the misuse or abuse of charity or relief, and of the power that necessarily has to go with it. I believe that this act, if honestly carried into effect, will take relief out of politics and take politics out of relief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. King in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont desire the matter to which he referred inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the entire text of the amendment which was offered on June 3, 1938, shown at pages 8139 and 8140 of the RECORD, and the vote thereon, the vote standing—yeas 33, nays 35—as well as the other matters to which I referred. Mr. President, I want it clear that my request covers the rollcall vote on those two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood. Without objection, the request is granted.

The matters referred to are as follows:

[From p. 8000, vol. 83, pt. 7, 75th Cong., 3d sess.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]

So Mr. Austin's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish simply to say a word concerning the comment and observations of the Senator from Vermont. I am sure that the President of the United States, in making reference to his message of January 5, 1939, had no intention of seeking to deprive the Senator from New Mexico [Mr.

HATCH] of any credit for his long and persistent advocacy of legislation of this sort. The President's message on the 5th of January was, as I recall, the first official recommendation of any President in behalf of legislation of this nature. We are all familiar with the fact that prior to January 5 the Senator from New Mexico had offered the amendment to which reference has been made, and that during most of the last session of Congress the Senator from New Mexico urged legislation of this nature. If this be wise legislation, as I hope experience will prove, there will be sufficient credit for everyone who had anything to do with it, and I think it unnecessary to draw distinctions regarding who first suggested this legislation or under whose influence it may have been enacted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to say that yesterday, while the calendar was being called, a number of bills were passed over under objection. Among the bills thus passed over was one in which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] is interested, and he gave notice that at the first opportunity he would seek to have that bill considered. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] likewise indicated his desire to have considered the bill which he has now brought forward. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] had indicated the same desire with reference to several bills in which he was interested. I assured all of them, during the call and following the call of the calendar, that they would be given opportunity today to move to take up those bills, respectively.

The Vice President asked me in what order the bills should be brought up and, of course, I had to take the responsibility of designating the order. As I indicated to the Vice President, it seemed to me that the Senator from Oklahoma had the first call because of what had transpired yesterday; likewise I thought that it would not take long to consider the bill on which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] desired to have action, and, following that, the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper] would be recognized for the purpose of taking up the bill in which he is interested.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BARKLEY. In a moment, Mr. President.

It seems that in making that arrangement regarding those bills, I overlooked the fact that just a few days ago the Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] had given notice that he would seek permission today to address the Senate.

Mr. President, in making the arrangement regarding the presentation of the bills, I had no intention to deprive the Senator from Washington of his rights. I did not know from what was stated in the RECORD on that day, that he would seek recognition immediately upon the convening of the Senate today; because, as we all know, a Senator may speak on any subject during the consideration of any bill.

Let me say, Mr. President, that in trying to make arrangements for orderly procedure in connection with consideration of bills, I had no intention of depriving the Senator from Washington of the opportunity to proceed according to the arrangement which he had asked be made for today.

SALE OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2904) to provide for the sale under certain conditions of agricultural commodities held by the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Maryland. Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have a matter which I feel sure would not take more than a minute.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not think the bill I have will take more than a minute. Since 12 o'clock I have been trying to obtain consideration of it. Will the Senator permit me to proceed?

Mr. President, I do not believe there will be any objection to the bill which is before the Senate, and which I believe can be disposed of in a very few minutes.

The bill proposes to authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell for cash to foreign governments commodities to which the Corporation has acquired title. The bill is inspired by the fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation has proposals which would make it possible to sell approximately 175,000 bales of cotton stored in the United States, to which the Corporation has title.

We have been storing and holding the cotton, as Members of the Senate know, some of it since 1934. The carrying charges amount to $4 per year per bale. That means that each year, on more than 11,000,000 bales, we are spending $45,000,000 for warehouse and insurance charges, comprising the carrying charges.

This proposal would mean that we would sell to two governments—the Governments of France and Switzerlandapproximately 175,000 bales of cotton. According to the proposal, it would be sold for cash, and there would be an agreement on the part of France and Switzerland that they would hold the cotton for 5 years. Because of the agreement to hold the cotton for 5 years, which would cause them to make a purchase with a restricted use, the Governments involved believe that they should be entitled to some concessions, because they could buy at the world price and sell when they pleased if there were no restriction. They believe there should be an incentive to them to make the purchase. They discussed the proposal of dividing the carrying charge which would be incurred by the United States Government for a period of 5 years if we continued to hold the cotton. However, there was an agreement in the tentative conversations that in no case would we give to them a concession of carrying charges in excess of the amount we would pay during 18 months.

If the cotton was sold, it would be sold for cash. Governments concerned would hold it for 5 years. amount paid would be the world price less the carrying charges for 18 months.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator please explain how the Commodity Credit Corporation acquires title to the cotton?

Mr. BYRNES. It acquires title because the cotton has been stored in warehouses upon notes from the farmers, some of them in 1934, some in 1937, and some in 1938. The notes provide that if they are not paid at maturity the Commodity Credit Corporation has the power to acquire title. Each year the notes have been extended. The Senator is familiar with the provisions of the law with reference to barter; but even without those provisions, the Commodity Credit Corporation has the right to acquire title. Under the terms of the notes, if the note is not paid at maturity, the Commodity Credit Corporation has the right to acquire title. It has acquired title to the 1934, 1937, and 1938 cotton.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Is there not a limitation in the act on the right to sell?

Mr. BYRNES. The act is an entirely different thing; and while the conditions set forth in the act apply only to the cotton involved, the notes provide that at maturity the Commodity Credit Corporation may acquire title. However, there is an act which provides that the cotton may not be sold for less than the loan value plus all the carrying charges, which makes it impossible to sell it.

Mr. DANAHER. The fact of the matter is that the Commodity Credit Corporation cannot sell any of the cotton, even though the notes are matured. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. It cannot sell it because of the price.

Mr. DANAHER. In other words, we would suspend the operation of the act by such a bill as is now under consideration.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. One other question: Is it not obvious that if the governments referred should take the cotton referred to they would then not be going into the world market and buying our free cotton?

Mr. BYRNES. They would not be buying our free cotton. They would be buying the cotton which we have, and on which we are paying storage and carrying charges, which are costing us $45,000,000 a year.

Mr. DANAHER. Is there not a supply of 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 bales of free cotton each year which these countries normally would buy if we should not pass the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. The governments could buy in the market if they wished to; and, of course, they would then have the right to use the cotton as they pleased.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. So far as the producer is concerned, any legislation which has been enacted has had in view the purpose of protecting the producer against the dumping of cotton on the market so long as he participated in the program of curtailment. That is why, unfortunately, we cannot sell what we have.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator advocate that the Government adopt the policy now represented by the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. Absolutely, Mr. President. I think so long as we have 11,000,000 bales of cotton and it is costing the taxpayers $45,000,000 a year to carry it, whenever it is possible for us to sell and obtain hard cash it is to our best interest to dispose of it. We cannot keep it forever. We have had some of it for 5 years, from 1934 to 1939. If we continue to carry it, the carrying charges will soon amount to as much as the value of the cotton.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. BYRNES subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the question be put upon the bill which I have presented to the Senate.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator now asking that the bill be passed?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

AMENDMENT OF PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE ACT

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have no desire to take the time of the Senator from Washington. House bill 7096 to amend the Philippine Independence Act has passed the House, and it came over to the Senate yesterday. Will the Senator from Washington give me his attention?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield if I may do so without losing the floor, Mr. President. However, I do not wish to lose the floor by the transaction of any business.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, may I ask a question, with the understanding that the Senator will not lose the floor? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor, and he has yielded to the Senator from Maryland, apparently for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I ask unanimous consent, provided the matter I shall suggest does not consume more than a minute, that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 7096, an amendment to the Philippine Independence Act, which has passed the House, and which the administration is asking me to rush through because certain provisions of the existing law will soon expire. Mr. Sayre has been in my office all morning. I have no interest in the matter, except that I am trying to accommodate him. The consideration of the bill would not require more than a minute.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to look at the bill. I will have to refuse unanimous consent at this time until I have examined the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that it is an amendment to the act passed not long ago. We have worked out everything so that the Senate's position prevails.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am asking only an opportunity to read the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can explain it in a minute.

THE FAR EASTERN SITUATION

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, last week the Secretary of State served notice on the Japanese Government that the treaty which was signed between our Government and the Japanese Government in 1911, commonly known as the treaty of amity and commerce, would under its terms be abrogated at the conclusion of a period of 6 months from the date of the notice. That position was taken by the Secretary of State, in my opinion, as an independent act on the part of our Government, without consultation with and without any attention to the relationship of any other government in the world with the Government of Japan. I think it is interesting to read a statement by Mr. David Lawrence in the United States News of this week, in which he said:

Parallelism, the policy of acting jointly and in consultation with Great Britain, has apparently been dropped. For the first time since the current China incident began, July 7, 1937, the United States has taken a decisive step toward Japan, evidently without consulting Britain.

Mr. President, I wish to say that so far as my personal attitude is concerned, it is based entirely upon the terms of a resolution which I introduced a few weeks ago asking for an embargo on certain goods which are being shipped at the present time from the United States to Japan and used by Japan in the prosecution of her war. I contend that the goods are being shipped from this country in violation of our obligations under the Nine Power Pact.

Mr. President, I am not speaking concerning any interest we may have in China. I presented the resolution simply as a recognition of our responsibility and the responsibility of our own citizens under the terms and provisions of a treaty into which we solemnly entered. I do not want any one to say that in presenting the resolution or discussing it I am concerned in any of the interests which may be engaged in business in China itself.

OUR ATTITUDE TODAY

I think that in view of the importance of this subject during the next 6 months, prior to the expiration of the 6 months' notice, there will be very great discussion among the people of the country and among Members of the Congress as to what should be our attitude in the far eastern situation. I think it is worth while, even at this late date in the session, to have a rather comprehensive consideration of the situation in the Far East and of our attitude today and our attitude in the past toward far eastern problems.

I first want to call the attention of the Senate to the attitude expressed by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, on February 23, 1932, in a letter addressed to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. I desire to read briefly from the letter of that date. The letter is addressed:

MY DEAR SENATOR BORAH: You have asked my opinion whether, as has sometimes been recently suggested, present conditions in China have in any way indicated that the so-called Nine Power Treaty has become inapplicable or ineffective or rightly in need of modification, and if so, what I considered should be the policy of this Government.

of this Government.

This treaty, as you of course know, forms the legal basis upon which now rests the "open door" policy toward China. That policy, enunciated by John Hay in 1899, brought to an end the struggle among various powers for so-called spheres of interest in China which was threatening the dismemberment of that Empire. To accomplish this Mr. Hay invoked two principles: (1) Equality of commercial opportunity among all nations in dealing with China; and (2) as necessary to that equality the preservation of China's territorial and administrative integrity.

He then goes on to say:

The policy of the Government of the United States is to seek a solution which may bring about permanent safety and peace to China, preserve China's territorial and administrative entity, protect all rights guaranteed to friendly powers by treaty and international law, and safeguard for the world the principle of equal and impartial trade with all parts of the Chinese Empire.

Quoting further from Mr. Stimson's letter:

For 20 years thereafter, the "open-door" policy rested upon the informal commitments made by the various powers, but in the winter of 1921 to 1922, at a conference participated in by all of the principal powers which had interests in the Pacific, the policy was crystallized into the so-called Nine Power Treaty, which gave definition and precision to the principles upon which the policy rested. In the first article of that treaty, the contracting powers, other than China agreed, (1), to respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China; (2) to provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government; (3) to use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China; (4) to refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of subjects or citizens of friendly states and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such states. such states.

Mr. Stimson says in reference to that treaty:

This treaty thus represents a carefully developed and matured international policy intended, on the one hand, to assure to all of the contracting parties their rights and interests in and with regard to China, and on the other hand, to assure to the people of China the fullest opportunity to develop without molestation their sovereignty and independence according to the modern and enlightened standards believed to maintain among the peoples of this earth.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I presume it is the purpose of the Senator to place in the RECORD the statement of the Secretary of State leading up to this policy?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will read it into the RECORD. Does the Senator mean the statement of Secretary of State Hughes at the time?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes: and also the recent statement in relation to the abrogation of the treaty with Japan.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes: I have a rather complete statement.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I hope the Senator will give us, so far as the documents are concerned, a complete picture, if they are not too lengthy. They are of great importance, and it would be well for those of us who may not be so expert as is the Senator from Washington to have the documents printed in his speech where we could obtain and study them.

TO GIVE ENTIRE PICTURE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I appreciate what the Senator says about expertness on my part; but it is not correct. I have, however, made rather a careful research into this subject, and I intend, before I conclude, to put in all the documents I have which are pertinent. I hope to give the whole picture; but, as the Senator can see, I desire to do it in a logical order, considering the various points as they come up. Therefore, I am not going to do what is suggested at the present time, but I will, before I conclude, go through all the documents.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I meant the statement in all sincerity, because I know the Senator has examined the subject with great care, and I am glad that he has brought it up at this time, because it should be before the Members of the Senate during the vacation, and we should, during the days and hours that we are not here, give it some thought before we return in January.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator from Minnesota and assure him that I am going to try to put in the RECORD everything of importance upon this subject.

Proceeding further with the letter from the Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, to Senator Boran, I quote, as follows:

In its report to the President-

He is referring to the Nine Power Treaty-announcing this treaty, the American delegation, headed by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Charles E. Hughes, said: "It is believed that through this treaty the 'open door' in China has at least been made a fact."

Then he quoted from a statement made by Baron Shidehara, the representative of Japan at the nine-power conference, as follows:

At the same time the representative of Japan, Baron Shidehara, announced the position of his government as follows:

"No one denies to China her sacred right to govern herself. No one stands in the way of China to work out her own great national destine." destiny.'

Secretary Stimson further stated to Senator BORAH:

The signatories and adherents of the Nine Power Treaty rightfully felt that the orderly and peaceful development of the 400,000,000 of people inhabiting China was necessary to the peaceful welfare of the entire world and that no program for the welfare of the world as a whole could afford to neglect the welfare and protection of China.

Having read these excerpts, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the letter from Secretary Stimson to Senator Borah, dated February 23, 1932, which is contained on page 293 of the book called The Far East, by Quigley and Blakeslee.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Nine Power Pact be included?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have that separately and I will put that in later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma in the chair). Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 23, 1932.

My Dear Senator Borah: You have asked my opinion whether, as has been sometimes recently suggested, present conditions in China have in any way indicated that the so-called Nine Power Treaty has become inapplicable or ineffective or rightly in need of modification, and if so, what I considered should be the policy of this Government.

this Government.

This treaty, as you of course know, forms the legal basis upon which now rests the "open door" policy toward China. That policy, enunciated by John Hay in 1899, brought to an end the struggle among various powers for so-called spheres of interest in China which was threatening the dismemberment of that empire. To accomplish this Mr. Hay invoked two principles, (1) equality of commercial opportunity among all nations in dealing with China, and (2) as necessary to that equality the preservation of China's territorial and administrative integrity. These principles were not new in the foreign policy of America. They had been the principles upon which it rested in its dealings with other nations for many years. In the case of China they were invoked to save a situation which not only threatened the future development and sovereignty of that great Asiatic people, but also threatened to create dangerous and constantly increasing rivalries between the other nations of the world. War had already taken place between Japan and China. At the close of that war three other nations intervened to prevent Japan from obtaining some of the results of that war claimed by her. Other nations sought and had intervened to prevent Japan from obtaining some of the results of that war claimed by her. Other nations sought and had obtained spheres of interest. Partly as a result of these actions a serious uprising had broken out in China which endangered the legations of all of the powers at Peking. While the attack on those legations was in progress, Mr. Hay made an announcement in respect to this policy as the principle upon which the powers should act in the settlement of the rebellion. He said:

"The policy of the Government of the United States is to seek a solution which may bring about permanent safety and peace to China, preserve Chinese territorial and administrative entity, protect all rights guaranteed to friendly powers by treaty and international law, and safeguard for the world the principle of equal and impartial trade with all parts of the Chinese Empire."

He was successful in obtaining the assent of the other powers to the policy thus announced.

to the policy thus announced.

In taking these steps, Mr. Hay acted with the cordial support of the British Government. In responding to Mr. Hay's announcement, above set forth, Lord Salisbury, the British Prime Minister, expressed himself "most emphatically as concurring in the policy of the United States."

For 20 years thereafter the "open door" policy rested upon the informal commitments thus made by the various powers. But in the winter of 1921–22, at a conference participated in by all of the principal powers which had interests in the Pacific, the policy was crystallized into the so-called Nine Power Treaty, which rave definition and precision to the principles there which the gave definition and precision to the principles upon which the policy rested. In the first article of that treaty, the contracting powers, other than China, agreed:

"1. To respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

"2. To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

"3. To use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China.

"4. To refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of subjects or citizens of 'friendly states, and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such states."

This treaty thus represents a carefully developed and matured international policy intended, on the one hand, to assure to all of the contracting parties their rights and interests in and with regard to China, and on the other hand, to assure to the people of China the fullest opportunity to develop without molestation their sovereignty and independence according to the modern and enlightened standards believed to maintain among the peoples of this earth. At the time this treaty was signed, it was known that China was engaged in an attempt to develop the free institutions of a self-governing republic after her recent revolution from an autocratic form of government; that she would require many years of both economic and political effort to that end; and that her progress would necessarily be slow. The treaty was thus a covenant of self-denial among the signatory powers in deliberate renunciation of any policy of aggression which might tend to interfere with that development. It was believed—and the whole history of the development of the "open door" policy reveals that faith—that only by such a process, under the protection of such an agreement, could the fullest interests not only of China but of all nations which have intercourse with her best be served.

In its report to the President announcing this treaty, the American delegation, headed by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Charles E. Hughes, said:

"It is believed that through this treaty the 'open door' in China

"It is believed that through this treaty the 'open door' in China has at least been made a fact."

During the course of the discussions which resulted in the treaty, the chairman of the British delegation, Lord Balfour, had stated that—

"The British Empire delegation understood that there was no "The British Empire delegation understood that there was no representative of any power around the table who thought that the old practice of 'spheres of interest' was either advocated by any government or would be tolerable to this conference. So far as the British Government were concerned, they had, in the most formal manner, publicly announced that they regarded this practice as utterly inappropriate to the existing situation."

At the same time the representative of Japan, Baron Shidehara, announced the position of his Government as follows:

"No one denies to China her sacred right to govern herself. No one stands in the way of China to work out her own great national destiny."

"No one defines to China the sactor light to Some stands in the way of China to work out her own great national destiny."

The treaty was originally executed by the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal. Subsequently it was also executed by Norway, Bolivia, Sweden, Denmark, and Mexico. Germany has signed it, but her parliament has not yet ratified it.

It must be remembered also that this treaty was one of several treaties and agreements entered into at the Washington Conference by the various powers concerned, all of which were interrelated and interdependent. No one of these treaties can be disregarded without disturbing the general understanding and equilibrium which were intended to be accomplished and effected by the group of agreements arrived at in their entirety. The Washington Conference was essentially a disarmament conference, aimed to promote the possibility of peace in the world not only through the cessation of competition in naval armament but also by the solution of various other disturbing problems which threatened the peace of the world, particularly in the Far East. These problems were all interrelated. The willingness of the American Government to surrender its then commanding lead in battleship Government to surrender its then commanding lead in battleship Government to surrender its then commanding lead in battleship construction and to leave its positions at Guam and in the Philippines without further fortification, was predicated upon, among other things, the self-denying covenants contained in the Nine Power Treaty, which assured the nations of the world not only of equal opportunity for their eastern trade but also against the military aggrandizement of any other power at the expense of China. One cannot discuss the possibility of modifying or abrogating those provisions of the Nine Power Treaty without considering at the same time the other promises upon which they were really dependent.

Six years later the policy of self-denial against aggression by a really dependent.

Six years later the policy of self-denial against aggression by a stronger against a weaker power, upon which the Nine Power Treaty had been based, received a powerful reinforcement by the execution by substantially all the nations of the world of the Pact of Paris, the so-called Kellogg-Briand Pact. These two treaties represent independent but harmonious steps taken for the purpose of alining the conscious and public opinion of the world in favor of a system of orderly development by the law of nations including the settlement of all controversies by methods of justice and peace instead of by arbitrary force. The program for the protection of China from outside aggression is an essential part of any such development. The signatories and adherents of the Nine Power Treaty rightly felt that the orderly and peaceful development of the 400,000,000 of people inhabiting China was necessary to the peaceful welfare of the entire world and that no program for the welfare and protection of China.

and protection of China.

and protection of China.

The recent events which have taken place in China, especially the hostilities which having been begun in Manchuria have latterly been extended to Shanghai, far from indicating the advisability of any modification of the treaties we have been discussing, have tended to bring home the vital importance of the faithful observance of the covenants therein to all of the nations interested in the Far East. It is not necessary in that connection to inquire into the causes of the controversy or attempt to apportion the blame between the two nations which are unhappily involved; for, regardless of cause or responsibility, it is clear beyond peradventure that a situation has developed which cannot, under any circumstances, be reconciled with the obligations of the covenants of these two treaties, and that if the treaties had been faithfully observed such a situation could not have arisen. The signatories of the Nine Power Treaty and of the Kellogg-Briand Pact, who are not parties to that conflict, are not likely to see any reason for modifying the terms of those treaties. To them the real value of the faithful performance of the treaties has been brought sharply home by the perils and losses to which their nationals have sharply home by the perils and losses to which their nationals have been subjected in Shanghai.

That is the view of this Government. We see no reason for abandoning the enlightened principles which are embodied in these treaties. We believe that this situation would have been avoided had these covenants been faithfully observed, and no evidence has come to us to indicate that a due compliance with them would have interfered with the adequate protection of the legitimate rights in China of the signatories of those treaties and their nationals legitimate rights in China of the signatories of those treaties and their nationals.

On January 7 last, upon the instruction of the President, this Government formally notified Japan and China that it would not recognize any situation, treaty, or agreement entered into by those Governments in violation of the covenants of these treaties, which affected the rights of our Government or its citizens in China. If affected the rights of our Government or its citizens in China. If a similar decision should be reached and a similar position taken by the other Governments of the world, a caveat will be placed upon such action which, we believe, will effectively bar the legality hereafter of any title or right sought to be obtained by pressure or treaty violation, and which, as has been shown by history in the past, will eventually lead to the restoration to China of rights and titles of which she may have been deprived.

In the past our Government, as one of the leading powers on the Pacific Ocean, has rested its policy upon an abiding faith in the future of the people of China and upon the ultimate success in dealing with them on the principles of fair play, patience, and mutual good will. We appreciate the immensity of the task which lies before her statesmen in the development of her country and its Government. The delays in her progress, the instability of her attempts to secure a responsible government were foreseen by its Government. The delays in her progress, the instability of her attempts to secure a responsible government were foreseen by Messrs. Hay and Hughes and their contemporaries and were the very obstacles which the policy of the "open door" was designed to meet. We concur with those statesmen, representing all the nations, in the Washington Conference who decided that China was entitled to the time necessary to accomplish her development. We are prepared to make that our policy for the future. future.

Very sincerely yours,

HENRY L. STIMSON.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I should like to see a full attendance of the Senate. This, I am sure, is a most important subject: in fact there is no more important subject than that to which the Senator is addressing himself. It has to do with the future of our great Nation and our future relations in the Pacific. I think we are greatly indebted to him for bringing this matter up at this time.

AMERICA'S NOTE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator from Minnesota, and I hope that the Senators who are not present will make some use of the various documents which I intend to put into the RECORD during the course of my remarks.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read from a statement of policy of the United States which was made by Secretary Stimson on January 7, 1932. It was a note sent by the American Government to the governments of China and Japan. I will read that document rather than have it included in the RECORD by reference.

With the recent military operations about Chinchow, the last remaining administrative authority of the government of the Chinese Republic in south Manchuria, as it existed prior to September 18, 1931, has been destroyed. The American Government continues confident that the work of the neutral commission recently authorized by the Council of the League of Nations will facilitate an ultimate solution of the difficulties now existing between Chine and Inner But to release the present existing will facilitate an ultimate solution of the difficulties now existing between China and Japan. But, in view of the present situation and of its own rights and obligations therein, the American Government deems it to be its duty to notify both the government of the Chinese Republic and the Imperial Japanese Government that it cannot admit the legality of any situation de facto, nor does it intend to recognize any treaty or agreement entered into between those governments, or agents thereof, which may impair the treaty rights of the United States or its citizens in China, including those which relate to the sovereignty, the independence, or the territorial and administrative integrity of the Republic of China, or to the international policy relative to China, commonly known as the "open door" policy; and that it does not intend to known as the "open door" policy; and that it does not intend to recognize any situation, treaty, or agreement which may be brought about by means contrary to the covenants and obligations of the Pact of Paris, of August 27, 1928, to which treaty both China and Japan, as well as the United States, are parties.

In other words, in that statement made by the then Secretary of State we very definitely recognized our responsibilities under the Nine Power Treaty; that was not simply a matter of the responsibility of those in China and Japan toward our citizens and nationals in China, but that we ourselves, by signing the nine-power agreement, did have a responsibility toward affairs in China and the relationships between China and other nations. Furthermore, that we would never recognize any territory which was acquired in violation of the Kellogg-Briand Pact of 1928.

Mr. President, in considering the question of our relationship with China, I desire at this point to refer to the testimony which was given before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate when we were considering neutrality legislation by Dr. Walter H. Judd, who has been in China for many years, and who appeared before our committee as the only witness who testified upon the far eastern situa-

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator referred to the Kellogg-Briand Pact. That is the pact outlawing war, is it not?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is the pact signed by practically all the nations of the world, in which the nations agreed to relinquish war as an instrument of national policy.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It is a very short treaty, and I hope the Senator will include it in his remarks.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will include it before I con-

Mr. President, I wish to say that when the Committee on Foreign Relations had heard a number of witnesses we had an informal meeting of the committee on the question of other witnesses being called, and it was the unanimous opinion of those present at that meeting that the testimony of Dr. Judd had been so outstanding, and had so clearly and exhaustively outlined the situation in the Far East, that there was no need to call any other witnesses upon the Chinese-Japanese problem.

DR. JUDD'S TESTIMONY

Dr. Judd testified that he went to China first in 1925 as a doctor: he was there until 1931 when he was invalided home; practiced with the Mayo Clinic for 3 years; went back in 1934 to North China and has been in North China since 1934; that he left China 2 months ago, coming back to this country, and appeared at the request of the committee. He further testified that he spoke the Chinese language and also the Japanese language.

I want first to quote from his testimony upon the question of our background so far as China is concerned. He said this:

What is our past with regard to China? For 125 years we have been sending over missionaries to open schools, colleges, hospitals, and churches. It has been the single largest philanthropic enterprise, if considered only as that, that the world has ever seen from one people to another. Unfortunately for China, it led her to assume that because she found she could trust most of the missionaries as individuals therefore she could trust equally the nasionaries as individuals therefore she could trust equally the nations from which they had come. That confidence was too implicit and not wholly justified.

In 1899 China was on the chopping block, the powers were on the point of tearing her to pieces, when the United States announced the "open door" policy, refused to recognize the other nations' claims to "spheres of influence"; and our resolute adherence to that doctrine was one of the major factors in preventing China's dismemberment at that time. China has always felt that she was saved by America. We may have forgotten, but she has not.

After the Boxer Rebellion in 1900 when the other nations grabbed their indemnities, America returned hers to China to use for building universities and sending selected students to America to acquire our learning and skills, and then go back to modernize China. We may have forgotten, but China is eternally grateful. After the revolution in 1911, China took America as her model, as Japan had taken Germany as hers 50 years before. China wanted to be like the great sister Republic of the West, which had seemed to understand and help her all along the way. We procured that attitude and sent official and upofficial educations. encouraged that attitude and sent official and unofficial advisers to help her. China does not forget.

In 1917 we went to war. Woodrow Wilson promptly asked China to go to war on the Allied side. It was not a primary concern of China, but when America, her great friend and counselor, suggested it, she consented.

Then came 1919 and four white men, China's allies, in Versailles, awarded to Japan, another ally, the old German rights and a good deal more in Shantung, China's sacred province. When the word got back to China, the students and teachers, the articulate groups, left their studies and went out into the villages as living newspapers to inform and incite and organize that great est of all boycotts against Japan. It was the only weapon of resistance they had.

It was the only weapon of resistance they had.

It continued for 2 long years and was at last slowly but surely bringing Japan to terms. She was far more vulnerable then than bringing Japan to terms. She was far more vulnerable then than now. She had not yet developed her great merchant marine; she did not have her economic base in diversified markets all around the world. She was far more dependent upon her China trade. China was on the point of solving her problem by the only method she had, when our country did something else. We called a disarmament conference here in Washington. We wanted Japan to consent to a 3-5-5 ratio of naval strength in relation to our own and Great Britain's. Japan skillfully replied that she could consent only if, in addition to certain other things such as scrapping more than 20 of our naval vessels, giving up our plans to fortify the Philippines, and so forth, we could get the Chinese to call off the boycott. China was glad to do that if the powers would promise that the Japanese troops would get out of Shantung and would stay out; that the nations would promise to all stay out and give China a chance to work out her internal difficulties without the constant fear and threat of external aggression.

We all promised. That is what the Nine Power Pact is—from China's standpoint. If some other nation had suggested that she give up her boycott in exchange for a piece of paper, she would have politely declined. She did not trust Japan or France or England. She did trust America. When we advised, we urged, we persuaded, she consented. China, poor, naive, amateur in international relations, trusted the promises utterly because she had come to trust us.

Mr. President, that is the relationship which we have ac-She had not yet developed her great merchant marine; she

Mr. President, that is the relationship which we have acquired toward the Chinese as the result of these years of contact with them and the very definite and specific obligation which we assumed under the Nine Power Pact.

THE NINE POWER PACT

I want at this point, because it is too long to read, but I think it is of extreme importance, to insert in the RECORD what is known as the Nine Power Pact, including the proclamation by the President of the United States, and the agreement itself, omitting the names of the signatories.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It will include the names of the nations? Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It includes the names of the nations, but not the names of the representatives of the nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LANGUAGE IS NOT NEW

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, it is of interest that the recognition of the territorial integrity of China did not come through the use of new language by the conference here in Washington at the time of the agreement to the Nine Power Pact. On November 2, 1917, the then Secretary of State, Mr. Robert Lansing, wrote a letter to the Ambassador from Japan concerning the situation in China and I wish to have it inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 2, 1917.

> > ROBERT LANSING.

EXCELLENCY:

I have the honor to communicate herein my understanding of the agreement reached by us in our recent conversations touching the questions of mutual interest to our Governments relating to the Republic of China.

In order to silence mischievous reports that have from time to time been circulated, it is believed by us that a public announcement once more of the desires and intentions shared by our two Governments with regard to China is advisable.

The Governments of the United States and Japan recognize that territorial propinquity creates special relations between countries, and, consequently, the Government of the United States recognizes that Japan has special interests in China, particularly in the part to which her possessions are contiguous.

The territorial sovereignty of China, nevertheless, remains unimpaired and the Government of the United States has every confidence in the repeated assurances of the Imperial Japanese Government that while geographical position gives Japan such special interests they have no desire to discriminate against the trade of other nations or to disregard the commercial rights heretofore granted by China in treaties with other powers.

tofore granted by China in treaties with other powers.

The Governments of the United States and Japan deny that they have any purpose to infringe in any way the independence or territorial integrity of China and they declare, furthermore, that they always adhere to the principle of the so-called "open door" or equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China. Moreover, they mutually declare that they are opposed to the acquisition by any Government of any special rights or privileges that would affect the independence or territorial integrity of China or that would deny to the subjects or citizens of any country the full enjoyment of equal opportunity in the commerce and industry of China. dustry of China.

I shall be glad to have Your Excellency confirm this understanding of the agreement reached by us.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

His Excellency

Viscount Kikujiro Ishii.

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Japan, on Special Mission.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to read especially one portion of the letter. This was a mutual note which was jointly published, and was in the nature of an exchange of notes by our Secretary of State and the Japanese Government. No treaty was signed, no treaty was ratified by the parliamentary bodies of the two nations. Nevertheless the note was made public, and made public for a very definite purpose, the date being November 2, 1917, and the purpose being to make it of assistance to both parties in the international situation which existed at that time. I read the following from the note:

The Governments of the United States and Japan deny that they have any purpose to infringe in any way the independence or territorial integrity of China and they declare, furthermore, that they always adhere to the principle of the so-called "open door" or equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

Moreover, they mutually declare that they are opposed to the acquisition by any government of any special rights or privileges that would affect the independence or territorial integrity of China or that would deny to the subjects or citizens of any country the full enjoyment of equal opportunity in the commerce and industry of China.

EFFECT OF CHINESE ACTION

Mr. President. I think it might be well at this point to go back into the discussions which occurred here in Washington at the time of the conference called by President Harding, and directed by the then Secretary of State, now the Chief Justice of the United States, the Honorable Charles Evans Hughes. The background of it was outlined by Dr. Judd-he spoke of the Chinese embargo against Japanese goods, and the effectiveness of it, and the contention upon the part of Japan that she wanted that embargo to be lifted. Then the request was made that the Chinese delegation present to the Washington Conference the language which she would like to have in the agreement. On page 866 of the report of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments held in Washington from November 12, 1921, to February 6, 1922, we find the following:

In conformity with the agenda of the conference, the Chinese Government proposes for the consideration of and adoption by the conference the following general principles to be applied in the determination of the questions relating to China:

1. (a) The powers engage to respect and observe the territorial integrity and political and administrative independence of the Chinese Republic.

(b) China, upon her part, is prepared to give an undertaking not to alienate or lease any portion of her territory or littoral to any power.

2. China, being in full accord with the principle of the so-called open door or equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations having treaty relations with China, is prepared to accept and apply it in all parts of the Chinese Republic without exception.

Mr. President, that is the part which I wanted specifically to read into the Record, and I now ask unanimous consent that items 3 to 10, inclusive, contained on page 868 of the conference report, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

3. With a view to strengthening mutual confidence and maintaining peace in the Pacific and Far East, the powers agree not to conclude between themselves any treaty or agreement directly affecting China or the general peace in these regions without previously notifying China and giving to her an opportunity to

4. All special rights, privileges, immunities, or commitments, whatever their character or contractual basis, claimed by any of the powers in or relating to China are to be declared, and all such or future claims not so made known are to be deemed null and void. The rights, privileges, immunities, and commitments, now known or to be declared, are to be examined with a view to de-termining their scope and validity and, if valid, to harmonizing them with one another and with the principles declared by this

5. Immediately, or as soon as circumstances will permit, existing limitations upon China's political, jurisdictional, and administrative freedom of action are to be removed.

6. Reasonable, definite terms of duration are to be attached to China's present commitments which are without time limits.
7. In the interpretation of instruments granting special rights or privileges, the well-established principle of construction that such grants shall be strictly construed in favor of the grantors, is to be observed.

8. China's rights as a poutral are to be fully respected in future

8. China's rights as a neutral are to be fully respected in future wars to which she is not a party.

9. Provision is to be made for the peaceful settlement of international disputes in the Pacific and the Far East.

10. Provision is to be made for future conferences to be held from time to time for the discussion of international questions relative to the Pacific and the Far East, as a basis for the determination of common policies of the signatory powers in relation thereto.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, as a result of that proposal by the Chinese representatives, the chairman suggested that as this matter was of such importance, it might be fitting to reserve it for further discussion until after there had been time to study it.

Then there was a discussion by the chairman, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Robert Borden, Mr. Koo, Senator Underwood, Senator Lodge, and Senator Schanzer, and the following procedure was adopted:

The heads of delegations were appointed a subcommittee to consider the arrangement of the different topics relating to the Pacific and the Far East and to make recommendations to the general committee.

Shortly after that the report of the subcommittee was set forth by the chairman and general discussion was in order. Admiral Baron Kato made the following statement on the part of Japan:

1. It seems to the Japanese delegation that existing difficulties in China lie no less in her domestic situation than in her external relations. We are anxious to see peace and unity reestablished at the earliest possible moment, but we want to avoid all action that may be construed as an intervention in the internal affairs of China. All that this conference can achieve is, it seems to us, to adjust China's foreign relations, leaving her domestic situation to be worked out by the Chinese themselves.

In the light of some of the statements made since that time by the Japanese, in which they have contended that they had a right to go in and take charge of China because of the fact that China was not able to govern itself, this particular statement of Baron Kato at the Washington conference is not only interesting, but significant. He then proceeded to say:

The Japanese delegation wishes to assure the Chinese delegation and the whole conference that Japan has every desire to cultivate the happiest relations with China. We are solicitous of making whatever contributions we are capable of toward China's realization of her just and legitimate aspirations. We are entirely uninfluenced by any policy of territorial aggrandizement in any part of China. We adhere without condition or reservation to the principle of "the open door and equal opportunity" in China.

THE PORTUGUESE VIEWPOINT

Proceeding, the Portuguese delegate suggested that, in view of the fact that Mr. Elihu Root had been intimately related with Mr. Hay at the time of the original declaration in 1899, and had the confidence of all the members of the conference, Mr. Root should get up a statement which would be the statement of the conference if it were agreed to. This is found on page 880 of the report:

Mr. Root said he was quite in agreement with the opinion of the Portuguese delegate, that a mere expression of principle was not, of itself, of the highest value; however, he believed it was the necessary first step toward accomplishing the result which evidently all wished to accomplish in regard to China. He said that perhaps he might have a personal predisposition on account of having been a colleague of Secretary Hay in President McKinley's Cabinet, at the time Secretary Hay pronounced in favor of the open door; he was immensely pleased at the unqualified affirmative agreement of the powers to that principle. As he sat listening to the expression from the various delegations, he had been considering how to arrive at an expression of the points covered. It appeared, he said, (1) that all were agreed to respect the independence and territorial and administrative integrity of the Chinese Republic; (2) that all were agreed to follow a policy tending to secure to her the fullest possible opportunity to develop an effective form of government for herself, under the new conditions created by her abandonment of the old imperial form of government; (3) that all were agreed that there should be an equality of opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout China.

But anyone who had studied questions relating to the Far East Mr. Root said he was quite in agreement with the opinion

But anyone who had studied questions relating to the Far East and the Pacific knew that these same things had been repeated over and over again; they were repeated in 1902, 1905, and 1911, in the treaties between Great Britain and China; in the agreement of 1907 between France and Japan; in 1905, at Portsmouth; and in 1908 in the agreement known as the Takahira-Root agreement; they were the artifled policy in the computation of civilization. ment; they were the settled policy in the community of civilized nations, and he thought it would be useful to restate these principles all together.

As a result of that it was, as I have said, suggested that Mr. Root draw up the expression which he thought satisfactory.

Mr. President, going on with the report which Mr. Root made to the conference, the Chinese representative desired clarification and asked Mr. Root if in clause (1) the word "respect" included the idea "observe." The Senate will remember that I read from the original Chinese proposal, in which they used both words "respect" and "observe." The representatives of the Chinese Government at the conference had a feeling apparently that there might be a doubt raised by leaving out the word "observe," and the Chinese representatives asked for clarification upon that question. The Chinese representative stated that he had received the copy only as he entered the room and desired that the entire delegation should have the opportunity to consider the whole resolution.

Mr. Root replied that he regarded the word "respect" as rather stronger than the word "observe," stating that it made it really a declaration of the rule by which each signatory power would be guided in its individual conduct; that it did not import affirmative action: that it did not import interference by one country with another; that it did import what each one of the countries would do.

The Japanese representative, Baron Kato, asked the meaning of the phrase "administrative integrity" as used in the proposed resolution. He desired to know if this referred to political independence and was not intended to touch upon interests or privileges which in the past had been granted to various countries.

Mr. Root spoke with reference to their effect upon privileges that had already been granted. He replied that this phrase certainly did not affect any privileges accorded by valid or effective grants; that, on the contrary, respect for the administrative integrity of a country required respect for the things that are done in the exercise of its full sovereignty by an independent State.

MR. ROOT'S WORDS

I think it might be well to recall to the minds of the Senators what has occurred since 1931, up in Manchuria, and what has occurred since 1937 in other parts of China. Taking into consideration the definition by Mr. Root of the words "administrative integrity" and taking into consideration the fact that he specifically pointed out that the use of the word "respect" meant that each nation for itself would respect China's territorial integrity. We then can see how far Japan has gone from keeping the agreement which was made in reference to China in the nine-power pact.

Without very much further discussion, the resolution was read, and on page 900 we find the following language:

There being no further objection, each delegation was called and

There being no further objection, each delegation was called and the resolution was unanimously adopted as follows:

It is the firm intention of the powers attending this Conference hereinafter mentioned, to wit, the United States of America, Belgium, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and Portugal:

(1) To respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China;
(2) To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government;

To use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China:

(4) To refrain from taking advantage of the present conditions in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of the subjects or citizens of friendly States and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such States.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a few minutes ago I referred to the situation in which President Wilson asked the Chinese Government to join with us in our declaration of war against Germany, and the willingness of the Chinese Government to do that because of her friendly relations with the United States, and the confidence she had in the United States. I think we ourselves should just for a minute stop and consider what happened to China.

President Wilson found in the Far East precisely the same situation that he found in every other part of the world. We went into the war with the understanding that we were to accomplish certain things. We allied ourselves with certain nations, and when President Wilson got to Versailles he found that on point after point secret private agreements had been made between our allies, parceling out certain portions of the world to various nations in order that our allies might get the support of those nations.

I do not think any fair-minded person can doubt that President Wilson, in prevailing upon China to join with us in the war against Germany, was wholly sincere in his belief that it would be possible for him to protect China when the peace treaty was written.

Yet he got to Versailles and found the secret agreement between England and France on the one side and Japan on the other, by which it was agreed that if the Allies should defeat the Central Powers, Germany's rights in China would be turned over to the Japanese. And the poor Chinese, who had joined up so readily and so willingly, without any promise, without asking for anything, ended up as allies in a victorious war, and instead of finding part of their country under the domination and control of a nation on the other side of the world, found it now transferred to the domination and control of a nation which had, as I will show in a few minutes, already, through the medium of its 21 demands, indicated its absolute and complete intention ultimately to destroy the territorial integrity of China.

But I do think since we participated in that meeting at Versailles that we should have some thought about what China got out of that war. Some things are funny, but they are impressive, because of the fact that they are funny, and being funny and impressive, they are also sad and tragic, and I think what happened to China at Versailles certainly can only be classified as tragic.

I read from a book written by a prominent writer, Carl Crow, the title of which is "I Speak for the Chinese."

read from page 29:

Chinese delegates sat at the peace conference and day by day saw their hopes still further crushed, their claims ignored. So incensed were they that they refused to sign the treaty. But the claims of China were not entirely overlooked. During the Boxer uprising the German troops in Peking had seized the ancient bronze astronomical instruments from the Imperial Astronomical Chasevery and cent them to Pottdem where they were alread as a Observatory and sent them to Potsdam, where they remained as a souvenir of the part Germany played in suppressing the Boxers. The Versailles Peace Conference compelled Germany to return the astronomical instruments to China. It was the booby prize of the war, and was regarded by the Chinese as nothing more than an ironical gesture.

LACKED OUR RESPONSIBILITY

So far as the rest of the nations are concerned, I do not think that probably they should have felt very badly about their treatment toward China at Versailles. They did not have the responsibility toward China that we had. We ourselves had, through the medium of our President, Woodrow Wilson, induced China to join with us against the Central Powers in the late war.

I mentioned a minute ago about the attitude of Japan toward China, and I think it is now a proper point to try to consider what the attitude of Japan always has been toward China. This present adventure of Japan in China is not her first. Ever since Commodore Perry established relationships between Japan and the outside world in 1853, and the Japanese people had been taught the ideas of the outside world, they also commenced to acquire the territorial ideas and the aggressive ideas of the outside world. We must admit that the world itself taught Japan about aggression and territorial expansion. From shortly after 1853 evidences may be obtained to show that Japan had those ambitions and aspirations toward China.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Perhaps the Senator has already stated what I had in mind, that much of that which Japan has done, and much of the progress she has made along the line of armaments, and so forth, we ourselves have taught her. We met her at the time of the bow and arrow, the spear and the sword. We said, "We have a long barrel. We just put an iron slug in it and put some powder behind it, and you can shoot the bow-and-arrow man long before he can hit you." We proceeded to instill that idea. After that we said, "We have something that runs on wheels, that will throw a shell much farther than any rifle will shoot." We must accept some responsibility; and I think the Senator has well stated it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The first actual outbreak, however, came in the Chinese-Japanese War of 1894 and 1895. The policy of attempting to acquire territory in China by the Japanese has extended from that date until this.

Mr. President, I found in a little book on the reference shelf, called Chinese-Japanese War, an outline of those various attempts from 1894 down to date; and I ask unanimous consent that that portion contained on pages 86 to 90, inclusive, entitled "Summary View of Japan's Aggression in China," be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is the Senator referring to the war of

"JAPAN MUST FIGHT BRITAIN"

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It starts at that time, and comes down to date.

While we are on the point of what Japan has learned from other nations, I think it would be of interest to all of us to know what the Japanese attitude is as a result of the knowledge which she has acquired. The most interesting statement of it is in a book written by a lieutenant commander of the Japanese Navy named Tota Ishimaru. In this book entitled "Japan Must Fight Britain" is entitled in its entirety the argument of the Japanese with reference to the future. I wish to read from the last two pages of the

The British Empire is on the downgrade, or perhaps at the parting of the ways that lead to salvation and destruction. To fight Japan is to court destruction. England had better swallow her pride and make way. That is the wisest thing she can do to protect herself; she has territorial possessions in abundance.

Japan, England, and America are the three great Pacific powers; harmony and cooperation between them will bring peace. If the Pacific should prove to be the scene of another world war, it will be because the influence and possessions of these three are not evenly balanced and because two of them, England and America, persist in endeavoring to have everything their own way at the expense of the third. A condition precedent to the preservation of peace is that England and America should give way and enable a balance to be maintained.

Let each of the three reign supreme in its own domain.

Let each of the three reign supreme in its own domain. Amer-Let each of the three reign supreme in its own domain. America in the eastern, Japan in the western, England in the southern Pacific. Let each keep to its own allotted area, there to guide and guard the other powers. Let each respect the wishes of the others, honestly assist their progress and development, finally abandon all ideas of racial discrimination and hatred, remove all tariff walls and restrictions on migration, encourage the settlement of differences by an efficient system of arbitration. Then limitation of armament will present no difficulties, mutual confidence will increase, and the Pacific Ocean will not belie its name.

But unless America and England, and especially the latter who the more likely to come into collision with Japan, make way, all this is but so much froth.

England holds the key to the peace of the Pacific. Whether that ocean belies its name, whether it becomes the scene of another world war, depends on the attitude of the British people.

Mr. President, there may be those who will argue that it is perfectly proper to have Japan control the area which the lieutenant commander points out, to have us control the eastern part of the Pacific, and to have England control the southern part of the Pacific. There may be many who will argue that that is the proper solution of the problem. However, the fact is that our Government and other governments solemnly agreed that that would not be the policy; and we pledged ourselves, so far as we were concerned, that that would not be our policy. The Japanese Government is repeatedly importuning our Government to adopt precisely that policy.

I know that there are some personal problems with reference to Japanese fishing off the coast of Alaska. Fortunately we have been able to settle them amicably during the past few years; but I know that at any time, if we had agreed, Japan would have entered into any sort of an understanding we had wanted, saying, "We will draw a line down through the center of the Pacific Ocean. We will stay on one side and you will stay on the other, and there will be no argument about salmon fishing." However, we had entered into a solemn obligation binding not merely our Government but our own citizens, and each of them, to recognize and respect the territorial and administrative integrity of China. Once we attempt to adopt the sort of policy outlined by the lieutenant commander of the Japanese Navy we act in express violation of a solemn agreement into which we have entered.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It seems to me that the Nine Power Pact gave the mandated islands to Japan. As I remember, they were spread all over the Pacific, in various zones and areas. I will say to the Senator that I was never much of an advocate of the Nine Power Pact. However, that is beside the question. We gave great mandated areas to the Japanese, and the Japanese, as soon as they got their hands on them, immediately began to fortify them. Is not that just exactly what we should have expected?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think the Senator is mistaken in using the word "gave."

Mr. LUNDEEN. The islands were mandated.

VERSAILLES ACTION CONFIRMED

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Nine Power Pact confirmed the action at Versailles in reference to the mandated islands. For all practical purposes Japan obtained them at Versailles. They did not quite close up the title to them at Versailles; and the Nine Power Agreement-

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Nine Power Agreement put the seal of approval on the title.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Nine Power Agreement put the seal of approval on it. They had an incheate control over them before, and the Nine Power Agreement clinched it.

Mr. LUNDEEN. We spread Japan all over the Pacific, and put the seal of approval on it. What could we expect, except that she would fortify the islands and put herself in a powerful position, and almost immediately begin to breast her way over the waves of the Pacific and try to shoulder other nations out of their areas?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a few minutes ago I referred to 21 demands which were made by the Japanese Government on the Chinese Government in 1915. I wish to refer to them at this point, because I think they also fit into the general picture which it is necessary to obtain in order to make a proper appraisal of the entire problem. In doing so I think I can save time by reading from a book written by an author of great prominence on Far Eastern affairs, G. Zay Wood, who has written a number of books. He is a graduate of Columbia University, and has been president of the Chinese Political Science Association. He wrote a book entitled "Chino-Japanese Treaties of 1915." I wish to read briefly from that book:

The Chino-Japanese treaties of 1915, taken all together, comprise two treaties, properly so called, one respecting the Province of Shantung and the other respecting south Manchuria and eastern Inner Mongolia, and 13 diplomatic notes exchanged between the Chinese and the Japanese Governments and presumably attached to the above 2 treaties. For the sake of convenience these 2 treaties and 13 notes are hereafter referred to merely as "the Chino-Japanese treaties of 1915." They were concluded on May 25 of the said year as the result of the series of diplomatic negotiations in regard to the 21 demands. The said demands were made by the Japanese Government January 18, 1915, and were pressed upon the Chinese Government for acceptance in their entirety. The nature and the contents of these demands, the motive which had actuated them, and their political and economic significance have been treated in extenso in the brochure, The Twenty-one Demands. We need only recapitulate them very briefly here in order to make

We need only recapitulate them very briefly here in order to make our narrative comprehensible.

The demands consisted of five groups, the first relating to Japan's succession to the German rights and concessions in the Shantung Province, the second relating to Japan's special interests in south Manchuria and eastern Inner Mongolia, the third relating to Japan's desire of making the Han-yeh-ping Co. a Chino-Japanese joint enterprise, the fourth asking for nonalienation of the coast of China, and the fifth relating to the questions of China's national advisers, police administration, purchase of arms, Japanese religious propaganda in China, Yangtze Valley railways, and Fukien Province. Except the fifth group, which was postponed for "future negotiation," the first four groups of demands were embodied, in one form or another, in the 2 treaties and 13 annexed notes.

He then goes on to say:

Studied from the point of view of international law, the Chino-Japanese treaties of 1915 are void, on a good many grounds, some of which may appear extravagant, but some are undoubtedly unanswerable. Among these grounds may be mentioned (1) lack of legislative sanction.

He goes on in the next chapter to outline in detail the complete failure of the legislative branch of the Chinese Government to ratify the two treaties executed in 1915, and cites the provision of the constitution of China, written at Nanking in January 1912, which says that:

The provisional president shall have power, with the concurrence of the national assembly, to declare war and conclude

That is almost the same sort of provision we have in our Constitution, which requires the adherence and ratification of the Senate before a treaty which has been signed by the executive branch of our Government becomes effective. Certainly no one would claim that if our Secretary of State signed a treaty and it failed to come to the Senate for ratification, it would be binding upon our Government under our Constitution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. We have been doing that very thing with reciprocal-trade agreements.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am discussing the far eastern situation. I do not think the Senator seriously wishes to inject that question into this discussion.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I agree with what the Senator from Michigan has said.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. Wood continues:

(2) Vital change of circumstances under which they were entered (2) Vital change of circumstances under which they were entered into, (3) disappearance of one of their objects, (4) conflict with the existing treaties, (5) violation of the open-door principle, (6) inconsistency with the Covenant of the League of Nations, and (7) incompatibility with China's sovereignty and her right of selfpreservation and self-development.

So far as I am concerned it seems to me that the first of these reasons is enough. We do not need to state the others. The treaties were never ratified by the legislative branch of the Chinese Government.

Mr. Wood outlines in detail two other bases, each of which it seems to me are sufficient to prove his contention that the two treaties of 1915 were void.

Mr. President, I speak of treaties not for the purpose of citing them as treaties, but simply for the purpose of pointing out the 21 demands which were made, and the fact that in 1915 Japan was attempting by the 21 demands to obtain complete and absolute control over China and destroy the administrative and territorial integrity of China.

That is not the only evidence which has been given of that attitude upon the part of the Japanese Government and Japanese officials. On July 25, 1927, the then Premier of Japan, Premier Tanaka, presented to the Japanese Emperor what was known as the Tanaka memorial, which was a statement made by the Premier of the attitude of the Government of Japan concerning its future policy with China. It is a lengthy document, and I am not going to ask that it all be printed in the RECORD, because I do not think I should care to have the RECORD so encumbered, but I do desire to read a few excerpts from it. He said this:

In the future if we want to control China, we must first crush the United States just as in the past we had to fight in the Russo-Japanese War period. But in order to conquer China we must first conquer Manchuria and Mongolia. In order to conquer the world we must first conquer China. If we succeed in conquering China, the rest of the Asiatic countries and the South Sea countries will fear us and surrender to us. Then the world will realize that eastern Asia is ours and will not dare to violate our rights.

The Nine Power Treaty is entirely an expression of the spirit of commercial rivalry. It was the intention of England and America to crush our influence in China with their power of wealth.

BARON SHIDEHARA'S VIEWPOINT

Take that statement in connection with the statement I read a few moments ago from Baron Shidehara, who represented Japan at the Washington Conference, in which he said in glowing terms that Japan had no intention to destroy the territorial or administrative integrity of China, believed in the open-door policy, and readily acquiesced in the Nine Power Agreement. But in 1927 the Japanese Premier says:

The Nine Power Treaty is entirely an expression of the spirit of commercial rivalry. It was the intention of England and America to crush our influence in China with their power of wealth. The proposed reduction of armaments is nothing but a means to limit our military strength, making it impossible for us to conquer the vast territory of China.

A more dangerous factor is the fact that the people of China might some day wake up. Even during these years of internal strife they can still toil patiently and try to imitate and displace our goods so as to impair the development of our trade.

The way to gain actual rights in Manchuria and Mongolia is to use this region as a base and under the pretense of trade and commerce penetrate the rest of China. Armed by the rights already secured we shall seize the resources all over the country. Having China's entire resources at our disposal we shall proceed to conquer India, the archipelago of Asia Minor, central Asia, and even Europe.

Omitting a portion and coming down to what he says as to rights in Manchuria. I quote further:

As to the rights in Manchuria, we should take forceful steps on the basis of the 21 demands and secure the following in order to safeguard the enjoyment of the rights which we have acquired so far.

Then he outlines them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if there is any reference to the Philippine Islands in this particular paper?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There is no specific reference to the Philippine Islands, except the general statement that the Japanese intend to obtain control of all the area of the western Pacific.

Proceeding further with the quotation:

After a large number of our people have moved into outer and inner Mongolia, we shall then buy lands at one-tenth of their worth and begin to cultivate rice, where feasible, in order to relieve our shortage of food supply. Where the land is not suitable for rice cultivation we should develop it for cattle raising and horse breeding in order to replenish our military needs. The rest of the land could be devoted to the manufacture of canned goods which we may export to Europe and America.

From now on we must take military purposes as our object and build circuit lines to circle the heart of Manchuria and Mongolia in order that we may hamper China's military, political, and economic developments there on the one hand, and prevent the penetration of the Russian influence on the other. This is the key to our continental policy.

In our struggle against the political and economic influence of Soviet Russia we should drive China before us and direct the event from behind. Meanwhile, we should still secretly befriend Russia in order to hamper the growth of Chinese influence.

We should now demand from China the right of building all the important military railroads. When these railroads are completed, we shall pour our forces into north Manchuria as far as we can. When Soviet Russia intervenes, as they must, that is our opportunity for open conflict.

When life there is made miserable for the Chinese, they naturally will leave for places afar. There are other methods to bar the Chinese. Only if we try hard enough, no Chinese footprints will be found on Mongolian territory.

Then he goes on to say:

For the sake of self-preservation of giving warning to China and the rest of the world we must fight America sometime. The American Asiatic squadron stationed in the Philippines is but within a stone's throw from Tsushima and Senchima. If they send submarines to these quarters, our supply of foodstuffs and raw materials from Manchuria and Mongolia will be cut off entirely.

So far as I know, that is the only reference to the Philippines directly, and there he was not referring to the seizure of the Philippines except that they would ultimately have to fight America, and the first reason he gives is that the Philippines are so close.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The reference in this document, whoever wrote it—

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It was the Japanese Premier in the report made to his Emperor at the time he was the head of the Japanese Government, so far as there was a head outside the Emperor, outlining, in detail, the future plans for the expansion of Japan. It is known as the Tanaka Memorial.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the Senator that is somewhat reminiscent of articles we have read in prominent magazines about some "red" Napoleon conquering the earth, and also of the example of the great British Empire, on which the sun never sets, which now has 600,000,000 people under its flag, and one-fourth of the earth in its area. It is also somewhat reminiscent of the propaganda we heard during the World War that the Kaiser would conquer the earth, although he only had an area as large as Texas, and that now Hitler is going to conquer the world. Who is first on the list of world conquerors, and are we going to allow ourselves to be alarmed and become excited at every report that comes out about someone conquering the world?

NO INTENTION TO ALARM

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I want to say to the Senator that I am not presenting this matter with a view of alarming anybody. I think the Senator will agree that even my manner of presentation is not of an alarmist nature. My final thesis is, that we have a responsibility under the ninepower agreement which we should recognize. We have entered into a treaty. I present the statements in reference to Japanese ambitions solely for the purpose of attempting to prove-and I believe they do prove-Japan's intention in the present conflict of destroying the territorial and the administrative integrity of China. I do not present these matters on the basis of a scarehead to indicate any intention on the part of Japan to conquer the world, or that we, ourselves, need be frightened. I present them upon the basis that we have a legal and moral responsibility and if incidental to the statements in reference to Japan's intentions in China there also creep in other statements in reference to her intentions toward other parts of the world, I ask that they be considered merely as incidents which are necessary because they are there, and I have to read all the sentence and cannot leave out part of it.

Continuing on the question of the war aims of Japan, I wish to read from a book, written by Mr. William Henry Chamberlin, who was for many years the representative of the Christian Science Monitor in the Far East. The title of the book is "Japan Over Asia." I think those who are familiar with writings on the Far East will admit Mr. Chamberlin as being a recognized authority upon the problems there. He said this, on page 374 of this book:

Japan's war aims have not been stated with any great clarity by its statesmen, but they have been indicated by the activities of its soldiers. When hundreds of thousands of men have been mobilized and a sum almost equal to the whole year's budget has been appropriated within 2 months after the outbreak of hostilities, it is clear that no petty concessions will satisfy Japan's ambitions. Repudiations of territorial ambitions may be technically sincere, but they are meaningless, because political changes can be brought about through the creation of new puppet states on the model of Manchukuo.

There is strong reason to believe that Japan has three definite aspirations in China. The first is the creation of a regime in North China that will be entirely subservient to Japanese wishes. Along with a completely dependent Chinese administration in Peiping and Tientsin, a new Mongolian state, the frontiers of which are still indeterminate, seems to be taking shape. And Japan's ambitions are not restricted to the Peiping-Tientsin area. They include Shantung, where Japanese possess extensive economic interests, and Shansi, with its coal mines.

A Japanese-controlled North China, it is believed, will mean more cotton for the mills of Osaka and a new barrier to Soviet influence from the north. The coal of Shansi and the iron of Chahar are also important considerations; Japan's growing continental empire is expected to provide a large part of the raw-material base for the heavy industry indispensable to a first-class imperial power.

is expected to provide a large part of the raw-material base for the heavy industry indispensable to a first-class imperial power.

Japan's second aspiration is for a government in Nanking which will be only a little less subservient than the new regime in North China. A Japanese diplomat, Mr. Toshio Shiratori, formulated an idea that would certainly find approval in Japanese military circles when he recently advocated, in terms that would suggest either naivete or cynical irony, a complete Japanese military protectorate over China.

A third probable demand is for a change in the status of Shanghai, which has now twice been the scene of flerce fighting. A combination of the foreign and Chinese parts of Shanghai under a single administration with the status of a free city is an idea that finds favor in some Japanese circles. That Japanese influence in Shanghai will be immensely strengthened if the war turns out favorably may be taken for granted.

In short, "Japan over Asia" today has become a living reality, for which Japanese soldiers and sailors and airmen go to their deaths with traditional courage, with banzais for the Emperor on their lips, and for which the Japanese masses will have to pinch and scrape still more as the war bills fall due for payment.

Then he goes on to say—and while this does not directly work in with the point which I am now attempting to develop, it is of interest:

What are the chances that Japan will realize its bold stake on the oriental empire and bring all China, in one form or another, within the orbit of its political and economic influence?

This book was published in November 1937, which was shortly after the incident at the Marco Polo Bridge.

Japan will realize its bold stake in oriental empire, and bring all China in one form or another within the orbit of its political and economic influence. The time factor is, I believe, of vital, if not paramount, importance. If Japan can crush effective Chinese resistance within 6 months the military and political situation side of its venture will have succeeded, although the very broad question of whether Japan will have the surplus resources for effective economic exploitation will remain to be answered.

This was written in November 1937, and he says that they would have to win within 6 months in order to actually achieve victory.

On the other hand, if China after a year still has forces in the field perhaps armed from Russia, Japan's ultimate victory is likely to prove a pyrrhic one. Financial and economic difficulties will multiply; stocks of gold and foreign exchange will run low; the country will be seriously weakened in the event of a clash with some power better armed than China.

July 1937 was a very fateful month in the history of Japan and China. It marked the beginning of what seems likely to be a decisive test of national power, a test which many people in both countries had foreseen and yet which had been postponed and evaded so often that optimists were beginning to believe that it might be escaped altogether. Every ounce of Japanese national strength has been mobilized to meet an emergency that has been steadily expanding in proportions ever since it started and that shows no signs of abating in the near future.

THE MATTER OF TIMING

Mr. President, I want for just a moment, because I think it is of interest in the general situation, to point to the timing of Japanese efforts with events in other parts of the world. I am not today presenting the far eastern problem from the point of view of its relationship with the European problem. However, we must recognize that it does have its relationship, that while Japan has not signed a military agreement with Italy and Germany, and cannot be considered certain to be a military ally in the event Italy and Germany should have a war against the other nations in Europe, nevertheless, there has been a certain synchronization of efforts which could not in each instance be coincidental, and I think it is of interest to consider that in connection with the timing.

It carries us clear back to the period during the World War. I pointed out the 21 demands which were made upon China by Japan, made in January and February 1915, made at a time when the rest of the world was occupied, and seriously occupied, with conditions in Europe. It was at that time that the Japanese made their demands and they attempted to keep them secret from the rest of the world. They attempted to keep their treaty, to which I referred a few moments ago, secret from the rest of the world. They did succeed in keeping their treaties with England and France secret until the time of Versailles.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lundeen in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator might go a little further in his statement as to the synchronization of the efforts between the countries in the axis. The axis, of course, started out with Berlin and Mussolini, but it has been extended, as is conceded, I think, by Hitler and by Mussolini-to embrace Japan, and we notice that whenever there is a little tension in the east which will distract the attention of France and Great Britain, Japan then makes a reconnaissance in the Orient. She seizes the Honan, then moves to southeast China, and then makes further invasions into Canton and the neighboring country. So that they synchronize their activities. Whenever there is a little lull in the Occident, there is a recrudescence of the Japanese movements in the Orient, and vice versa. I think, as I stated on the floor of the Senate months ago, that there has been an understanding, if not a treaty, between the three powers looking toward their aiding each other in the destruction of the democratic nations.

POST ACTIVITIES

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I intend to develop that a little more fully. I disagree to a certain extent with what the Senator from Utah has stated. I do not think it has been upon the basis of a lull in Europe; it has been during lull periods, it is true, but, nevertheless, it has been during periods when there were threats of further action in Europe that the activity in the Far East is undertaken.

Going into detail on that question, on September 8, 1931, Japanese troops guarding the South Manchurian Railway fired on a Chinese patrol alleged to have torn up some S. M. R. rails north of Mukden. Thus Japan, on a pretext, began the invasion of Manchuria 3 years after signing the Pact of Paris. This incident came at a time when the world was submerged in the greatest economic crisis yet experienced, and coincided almost to the day—September 21—when Great Britain suspended her gold payments. It also coincided with the great Chinese flood of 1931 which inundated approximately 8,000 square miles in North Kiangsu Province, east of the Grand Canal and north of the Yangtse River.

On January 18, 1932, Japan extended her attack on China to Shanghai under an equally flimsy excuse. Two Japanese were injured in a free-for-all fight in front of a Chinese factory in the Chinese area of Shanghai. There was also some rioting 3 days later. The final casualties were three Chinese injured, one dead; three Japanese injured, one dead. This incident coincided with disturbances in Spain which culminated in a general strike at Seville. It also coincided with the march here in Washington by the bonus army. I do not believe, however, there was any synchronization of those two movements. It also coincided with severe difficulties in India, during which Gandhi was arrested.

On January 10, 1933, the Japanese Army marched into the Province of Jehol, cutting it off from China and making it a part of Manchukuo. This move coincided with more severe riots in Spain. There were general strikes at Barcelona, Valencia, Cuenca, and Cadiz.

On November 26, 1936, Japan and Germany signed the Anti-Comintern Pact, to which Italy later adhered. This portentous event coincided with the period when the attention of practically the whole world was centered on the rebel attack on the city of Madrid.

On July 7, 1937, the Japanese troops, carrying out night maneuvers, exchanged shots with a Chinese military unit at Marco Polo Bridge in Peking. This event, which was the beginning of the present conflict, coincided with meetings of the Nonintervention Committee on Spain. It also coincided with the further rebel attack on Madrid. July 7 was also the sixth day of the search for Amelia Earhart, lost in the Pacific Ocean. Also, at this time came the announcement of the British plan for the partition of Palestine.

On August 12, 1937, the undeclared war was extended to Shanghai. This event coincided with matters of extreme concern in Europe, principally the Anglo-Italian Pact negotiations. Subsequent events closely followed the developments of the war in Spain. The occupation of Nanking came on December 11, 1937, while the Panay was sunk the following day along with the destruction of three Standard Oil tankers. These two dates coincided with Mussolini's announcement in Rome of Italy's decision to withdraw from the League of Nations. In Soviet Russia the people voted by secret ballot for 1.143 candidates for election to membership in the Supreme Soviet.

The fighting in Siberia centering around Changkufeng, July 16 to August 28, 1938, was a preliminary diversion of attention from Hitler's demands on Czechoslovakia-Sudetenland absorbed October 3-and subsequent events during the following weeks served the same purpose. On October 13, Japanese troops landed in Bias Bay, entering Canton on October 21. On October 25 Hankow was occupied. This whole series of events both in Asia and in Europe not only served to divert the attention of the rest of the world, but also served to weaken the effectiveness of any moves which might have been made by the nations outside the Anti-Comintern Pact.

SEIZURE OF HAINAN

The seizure of Hainan came on February 9, 1939, at the time Hitler was in the process of taking over the whole of Czechoslovakia; also a few weeks later, on March 30, 1939, Japan extended her influence and control to the Spratly Islands in the South China Sea. This development coincided almost to the day with the surrender of Madrid.

Blockade of Tientsin in June and July of this year constituted a perfect diversion of attention from Hitler's demands on Danzig. The fighting around Lake Bor in Outer Mongolia served the purpose not only of diverting attention from Europe but also of discrediting Russia in relation to the possibility of an Anglo-Russian Pact, and also further diversion from attention to Hitler's demands on Danzig.

Mr. President, up to this time I have attempted to present two phases of this question: First, our responsibility toward China because of our relationship with the Chinese, and our treaty obligations to them; second, that Japan is in this war attempting to destroy the territorial and administrative integrity of China, in violation of the nine-power agreement.

I wish at this point to read the testimony of Dr. Judd on the question of the kind of war Japan is conducting in China. I read from his testimony at page 296:

The disregard for all rules of carrying on warfare; the refusal to take prisoners; the inhuman treatment of wounded Chinese soldiers, prohibiting Chinese or foreign Red Cross units to minister to their wounds or even to give them food and water; the attacks on undefended civilians as the primary "military objectives"; the unceasing diabolical assaults on Chinese women as a military measure, ordered by the high command which knew China's love of home to be her single most vulnerable spot; the taking over of home to be her single most vulnerable spot; the taking away of tens of thousands of Chinese children between the ages of 8 and 12, allegedly to be educated in Japan as Japanese; the systematic destruction of colleges and high schools to destroy China's scholarship and trained leadership which might conceivably be able to wear out and eventually assimilate China's present conquerors as it was able to absorb her previous conquerors; the forced growth and consumption by Chinese of opium and its more deadly derivative, heroin—all these I have seen personally, month in and month out, as the rule of Japanese conduct in China to which there is almost no exception. We used to say war was the worst of all evils in the world; but the wars we were talking about were, after all, "gentlemen's wars," mere child's play as compared to what is going on in China today. I think it is worth taking a few minutes at the outset to review these facts so we can have before us a picture of what it is we are helping along when we supply Japan with war materials; also, because this and 12, allegedly to be educated in Japan as Japanese; the systewar is unquestionably a prototype of what all wars are going to be in the future (at least those waged by totalitarian states), if we allow situations to degenerate to the place where most people can see no other way out than by resorting to war. It is people can see no other way out than by resorting to war. It is only as we face what the next war will surely be like that we can appreciate fully how imperative it is that we exert every effort to prevent its ever coming to us. That means trying in all proper ways to prevent its coming to anyone else either, for surely the only way we can be completely certain of keeping ourselves out of war is for there to be no war for us to get into.

AMERICA'S PARTICIPATION

Mr. President, turning to the question of what has been our participation and what is our participation in this war, there can be no question but that to a very material extent Japan is depending upon the United States for the materials which the Japanese are using in this war. We are participating in the Sino-Japanese War today. I know Senators have all read figures that we are furnishing 56 percent of the materials which might be used in the war. and I know that the Members of this Body were all shocked, knowing as they did of our treaty obligations and our relationship with China, to hear that we were furnishing 56 percent of the materials used in the war. But 56 percent is a deceptive figure, because in the matter of the most important articles the percentage we are furnishing is actually more than 56 percent. These are the figures as to some of the articles we are furnishing, figures compiled for the year 1938

Petroleum and products, 65.57 percent. Scrap or old iron and steel, 90.39 percent.

Ferro-alloys, 82.71 percent.

Other iron and steel semi-manufactures, 53.65 percent.

Copper, 90.89 percent.

Metals and alloys, not elsewhere specified in the list from which I am reading, 99.33 percent.

Automobiles and parts, 64.67 percent. Metal-working machinery, 67.09 percent.

Aircraft and parts, 76.92 percent.

So that as to the very important materials, we are furnishing a much higher percentage than the 56 percent which is furnished by us on the average.

Mr. President, an interesting article appeared on June 27 of this year in the Christian Science Monitor, written by Saville R. Davis, a staff correspondent, giving the figures I have read and other figures, and giving a statement concerning our participation through the medium of the supplies which we are furnishing. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor of June 27, 1939] UNITED STATES CHIEF ARMS PROVIDER TO JAPAN—DEMOCRATIC POWERS GIVE CHIEF AID TO CHINA'S ENEMY—AXIS NATIONS SUPPLY SMALL AMOUNT

(By Saville R. Davis)

Washington, June 27.—The United States is far and away the most important supplier of war materials to Japan, according to a broad and painstaking survey of world trade with that country made public by the Chinese Council for Economic Research here. Figures were obtained by Hu Tun-yuan from official Government sources and show that the United States supplied 56 percent of all Japan's imports of the most strategic war materials in 1938—a slight increase over the year previous—as compared with only 20.7 percent supplied by the British Empire in second place, and the 8.6 percent from Netherlands India in third place.

The three pations all interested in curbing Japanese aggression

The three nations, all interested in curbing Japanese aggression in China, controlled between them approximately 85 percent of Japan's foreign supply of these materials—a fact of prime importance in the event that economic restraining action should be attempted in future. While there are undoubtedly other sources for many of these materials, should these major suppliers adopt an embargo, the cost would be far greater and most of the commodities could not be found elsewhere in anything like the quantities needed by Japan tities needed by Japan.

FIGURES TELL STORY

The accompanying table speaks eloquently of the extent to which the United States has underwritten Japan's war on China—supplying in the past year 90 percent of the vital scrap or old iron and steel, 91 percent of the copper, 66 percent of oil and its products, 45 percent of the lead, 67 percent of the metal-working machinery, and so on and so on.

Aircraft and parts come in a special category. In 1938, according to Dr. Hu's figures, the United States provided $17,454,000, or 77 percent, of the world supply to Japan. This trade has since almost dried up as a result of the voluntary boycott requested by Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, in May of last year. Substantial contracts in force previous to that time were supplied during the remainder of the years, but no new licenses for export have been issued by the State Department since November 1, 1938, and in 1939 the amounts actually shipped under old contracts amounted only to $250,000 during the 5 months up to June 1. Parenthetically, these are the State Department's figures and include only aircraft and parts considered to be for war purpose; today airplane exports to Japan as reported by the Department of Commerce were approximately $1,000,000 in May of this year and may include materials convertible to war purposes.

Another table prepared by Dr. Hu and too lengthy to reproduce here shows what amounts of all war supplies are furnished to Japan by the democratic powers, on the one hand, and by the axis powers on the other. Even a quick glance shows the overwhelming extent of control of the situation by the democratic powers. Their column shows one high percent after another, looking down the list of commodities in the 1937 and 1938 trade with Japan; while the column of percentages supplied by the axis contains one zero after another.

contains one zero after another.

HOW TRADE ROSE

Only in the case of manufactured materials has the axis any significant share and even this is greatly outweighed by the supplies from the democratic powers which dominate these categories also. Only mercury should be mentioned as an exception, being entirely supplied from the axis side.

Another table shows the extent to which the war materials trade from the United States to Jonan healthnessed between 1007 and Another table shows the extent to which the war materials trade from the United States to Japan has increased between 1937 and 1938. In terms of quantity shipments gasoline and related fuels in containers more than doubled. Lead more than tripled. Aluminum went up 172 percent. Crude petroleum went up 35 percent. Significantly, also, a great many other items fell off, the most drastic of which was iron and steel scrap, which fell from 1,912,000 tons in 1937 to 1,382,000 tons last year. This was a decline of 29 percent in quantity and 44 percent in value. This was in line with a general curtailment of scrap from all sources which partly reflected the tightening of foreign exchange resources of Japan and partly reflected the taking over of the Lungyen iron-ore deposits in Chahar, China, which were opened up at the end of 1937.

Following are the salient figures with respect to the trade of Japan with the world as a whole:

Following are the salient figures with respect to the trade of Japan with the world as a whole:

The proportion of war material imports to all other imports rose from 29 percent in 1937 to 40 percent in 1938. War-material trade fell off only 3.4 percent, whereas total trade of all sorts fell off by 30 percent between these 2 years. "This reflects," says Dr. Hu, "Japan's policy of curtailing ordinary imports in favor of commodities that are necessary to the prosecution of war." In the case of cotton and wool for Japan's greatest nonmilitary export industry, the decline of imports was great, amounting to 49 per-industry, the decline of imports was great, amounting to 49 percent for cotton and 69 percent for wool.

The total of world sales of essential war materials and articles to Japan amounted to $306,000,000 in 1938, while sales of all commodities (including war materials) amounted to $757,700,000.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a table showing the shares of individual countries in total exports to Japan essential for war purposes, 1938, compared with 1937. I wish to point out this upon this particular table, Mr. President, because it is of interest. I read the same figure a few minutes ago as being the total percentage of exports from the United States to Japan, being 56 percent. During 1938, while we were furnishing 56 percent, we who are not allied in any way with Japan, we whose people almost unanimously abhor the methods which Japan is using in this war, Germany who is looked upon as an ally of Japan, furnished 7.68 percent, and Italy only 0.46

In 1937 we exported to Japan 54.54 percent, Germany 3.05 percent, and Italy 0.10 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

¹Including shipments to Manchuria.

²Including shipments to Manchuria. United States figure for 1938 includes shipments to Shanghai.

³Includes ores, tin, antimony, mercury, mica, and asbestos.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a table showing

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I next ask to have inserted in the Record tables showing shares of various groups of countries in total exports to Japan essential for war purposes. It shows that the United States and the Philippine Islands in 1938 furnished 57.7 percent. The United Kingdom, British Malay, Canada, British India, and Australia furnished a total of 20.69 percent. The Netherlands and Netherland India furnished 8.64 percent. France and French Indochina furnished 0.40 percent. Germany, Italy, Czechoslovakia, and Austria furnished a total of 8.24 percent. In other words, it is the so-called democracies of the world which are furnishing these supplies to Japan to be used for the purpose of destroying the territorial integrity of China and using them in the way which I have described through the testimony of Dr. Judd.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I next ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record another table showing the details of our shipments to Japan for the year 1938, compared with the year 1937. The table shows the United States exports to Japan essential for war purposes. In connection therewith I also wish to have printed in the Record a table showing United States exports to Kwatung, Manchuria, of essentials for war purposes, because the figures of both tables should be taken together.

PROFITS IN WAR

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, there can be no question in anyone's mind that we are actively participating in the war which Japan is conducting in China. As a matter of fact I do not know but the position of the Japanese might be considered a little more honorable than ours. They at least are sending out their men who are taking a chance on being killed. We do not take any chances on our lives in that war. All we do is to send our goods and materials over there that they use for military purposes and we get the profit out of it.

Mr. President, there has been much discussion in the Congress during the last 5 or 6 years about the question of profits in war. There has been and is a very sincere desire upon the part of the Congress, if it is possible, to work out legislation by which to prevent profits to accrue to our citizens from war, if we should be so unfortunate as to get into one. But certainly we cannot justify that sort of a position so long as we are actively furnishing to a nation in the world the supplies and the materials from which her munitions are manufactured for the purpose of destroying another nation, when we ourselves are obligated under the terms of a treaty to respect the territorial integrity of that

What difference is there so far as international morality is concerned between furnishing the soldiers to shoot the bullets and providing the material with which the bullets are made? What difference is there so far as international morality is concerned between furnishing the driver of the truck or furnishing the truck and the gasoline that goes to operate that truck? What difference so far as international morality is concerned between furnishing the pilots who operate the airplane and the men in that airplane who pull the gadgets that let the bomb go down to destroy the lives of the people in the community and the nation that furnishes the gasoline which propels that airplane?

We have taken a high and lofty position in world affairs. We have told the nations of the world that we insist upon respect for treaties. We tell the nations of the world that our hands are clean and that we are "holier than anybody else." We claim the right to pick and choose our friends, because some of them violate treaties and others do not.

In our actions in reference to Japan and by our violation of the Nine Power Pact, we become just as flagrant a violator of international agreements as any other nation in the world. And it does not speak very well for us to be casting reflection upon other nations when we, just because we can make some money out of it, just because we can make the profits out of it, proceed to furnish, I think, probably 70 percent-I have not attempted to segregate these figures, but, as I pointed out, it is 56 percent of the total amount, and I think 70 percent of the really essential material that Japan is using in the transaction of this war.

What is the attitude of our people on this subject, Mr. President? I introduced this resolution to which I referred some weeks ago. Since I have been in the Congress I have never seen such a favorable response. And I was not surprised a couple of weeks ago in reading the Gallup poll, the last poll, which was printed on July 23, to find what the replies were. The question was submitted to people throughout the country:

How far do you think United States Government should go to protect American interests in China?

This was not the question I am presenting. I said at the outset that I did not present this problem from the point of view of protecting American interests in China at all. I presented it from the point of view of our responsibility and our obligation as a nation under a treaty into which we have entered.

But the question was presented upon a basis which, to my mind, would receive much more unfavorable response than the question as I presented it. They asked:

How far do you think we should go? What should we do?

1. Fight Japan?

Protest to Japan?
 Stop shipments of war materials?
 Do nothing?

The answers were, 4 percent of the people wanted to fight, 18 percent wanted to protest, 51 percent wanted to stop shipments, and only 25 percent wanted to do nothing.

In other words, basing their answers upon what it seems to me should be a much less popular question than the one I would suggest, 75 percent of the people who were queried, answered that we should take some sort of action, and the majority of them answered that we should stop our shipment of goods, 4 percent, saying that we actually should go over there to fight.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point that particular portion of the article which refers to the Gallup poll in the United States, upon that question. I do not ask that the part with reference to the English poll be included.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VOTERS FAVOR EMBARGO ON WAR MARERIALS TO JAPAN, POLL SHOWS AMERICAN VOTERS FEEL THEIR GOVERNMENT SHOULD PROTECT INTERESTS IN CHINA BY TAKING ACTION

(By Dr. George Gallup, Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.)

PRINCETON, N. J., July 22.—As the war between Japan and China enters its third year, majority sentiment in the United States, as indicated in a survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion, favors taking positive action to protect American interests in China:

Only one-fourth of the voters in the survey think the United States Government should "do nothing" about China. The remaining three-fourths favor three definite courses of action. One group—a small one—thinks the United States should fight Japan. A second slightly larger group is content to have the State Department merely lodge protests with the Japanese Government whenever American interests in China appear to be molested. A third group, the largest numerically, believes that the proper course of action is to stop all shipments of American arms and war material to the Japanese forces.

The survey was conducted among a cross-section of voters in every State on the question: "How far do you think the United States Government should go to protect American interests in China?"

Voters were given their choice of four policies which the Gov-

The American survey revealed a number of interesting differ-The American survey revealed a number of interesting differences of opinion by geographical sections. The far West, which includes the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States, is the section most in favor of taking action to protect American interests in China. The vote in favor of "doing nothing" was lower in the far West than anywhere else in the country, perhaps because that area is geographically the closest to Japan and most affected by events in the Pacific.

AVERAGE CITIZEN EXPLAINS ATTITUDE

In explaining their attitude toward Japan voters in the American In explaining their attitude toward Japan voters in the American survey gave a wide variety of reasons for favoring action. Those who favor the most extreme course—fighting Japan—declared that the United States "will have to fight Japan sooner or later" and that we should help "stop the gangster nations."

Those who favor an embargo on war materials to Japan echoed the sentiment of one voter, a housewife in Troy, N. Y., who said: "If we don't believe in war, why do we furnish the materials of war?"

Others argued that since Japan "cannot fight without supplies" the quickest way to clear up the issue of American rights in China would be to stop shipment of war materials to Japan.

In the group who favor an embargo or merely a series of protests through the State Department were many who took the view that the American people should not be expected to fight for the protection of purely commercial interests in China. As one voter

"Why should we go to war to protect a few industrialists over there? The businessmen—and the missionaries—should remain there at their own risk."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. At this point in my remarks I wish to have printed in the RECORD a number of excerpts from newspaper editorials from every part of the country showing the attitude of the newspaper editors upon this question.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 7, 1939]

It is with shame that most Americans learn that American metals and other war goods have been available to Japan during these last 24 horrible months.

[From the Christian Science Monitor of June 30, 1939]

Relations with Japan have one very curious aspect. The United States supplies most of the raw materials with which Japan makes armaments, with which she orders United States ships out of Chinese harbors. It's just like kicking oneself.

[From the Strasburg (Va.) North Virginia Daily of November 10, 19381

We seem to have sold our birthright of trans-Pacific trade for a mass of munitions money.

[From the Conneaut (Ohio) News Herald of November 10, 1938]

Thus we lose the incalculable opportunities for the future that could have been expected from a revitalized, modernized China leagued with us in friendly trade. And we lose it largely by our own short-sightedness in selling to Japan most of the gasoline, steel, and other materials with which she has won her undeclared war. For transient millions we have given future billions.

[From the Alliance (Ohio) Review of November 8, 1938]

The most recent protest by the State Department against Japanese interference with American trade with China contained a veiled hint of possible retaliation.

A large part of our export trade to Japan since the beginning of its undeclared war on China has been in materials essential to the conduct of war and the supply of which Japan would hardly like to see cut off.

[From the Jamestown (N. Y.) Post of December 12, 1938] We cannot afford longer to be a party to Japan's ruthless murder of civilian men, women, and children.

[From the Oswego (N. Y.) Semiweekly Times of January 6, 1939] It is a situation which fills increasing numbers of Americans with deep concern and shame. We are, in effect, fighting with Japan against China although the overwhelming sympathies of our people are on the other side. Japan by herself alone, without these exports, could not possibly prosecute the war.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Post of January 5, 1939]

It is the overwhelming sentiment of the American people that military action against Japan must be ruled out.

Specifically, an embargo on Japanese goods might be imposed and, if it is necessary to go further, the United States might, through Congress, place an embargo on all exports to Japan.

[From the Athens (Ga.) Herald of January 12, 1939] We hope that Congress will no longer delay its action in pro-hibiting the shipment of such large quantities of scrap iron, especially to unfriendly nations.

[From the Washington Star of January 10, 1939]

If it is right to withhold aircraft and bombs from Japan, why not scrap iron, which is so essential to the production of munitions?

[From the Christian Science Monitor of November 8, 1938]

Nevertheless, Americans in general feel some shame that their munitions have played a large part in the assault on China. Something can be done about this. Congress' first job should be to empower the President to stop this traffic to Japan.

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) News of December 21, 1938] We lose little by risking Japan's resentment, since Japan has no plans that would benefit us anyway.

[From the Indianapolis (Ind.) Star of April 23, 1939; the Auburn (Ind.) Courier of May 2, 1939; and the Muncie (Ind.) Star of April 25, 1939]

There is almost complete national unity in sentiment regarding the shipment of munitions and war-making materials to Japan. The country may be divided on the neutrality issue. It resents deeply, however, the continued flow of supplies to the Japanese and deplores the failure of our Government to place an embargo on such shipments.

It may be true that other sources of supply might be available, although there is no other country with such resources open to export. Japan's anti-Communist allies can spare little. Russia is not aiding a prospective enemy and the democracies of Europe are conserving their supplies. America remains as a major aid to the Japanese in their conquest. If right and justice are joined with sentiment, an emberge should be placed on were materials with sentiment, an embargo should be placed on war materials to nations which obviously are aggressor or have violated treaties to respect territorial integrity of neighbors. Japan stands indicted on both of these counts.

[From the Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer of November 20, 1938] Japan will be only too glad to receive financing from the Occident to develop China. It now appears that the next step will be for western nations—particularly the United States and Britain—to decide whether they will finance Japan in explaining the fruits of her undeclared war. To do so would be to make permanent their own exclusion from the Asiatic commodity

[From the New York Post of June 22]

In this connection let us remember that the United States supplies Japan with more than 50 percent of her munitions, much of her oil, and with close to a million tons of scrap iron and steel annually. If Japan flouts a treaty she has signed, we are certainly under no obligation to sell her munitions, oil, or metal. We can embargo

We think an embargo on all munitions and metal to Japan is the way. It won't bring war; the embargo alone draws Japan's sting. It might lead to a reintegration of world relations. Surely each nation has the same obligation to act lawfully against disregard of its rights, as has each citizen in a democracy to act against willful disregard of his rights.

[From the Alton (Ill.) Telegraph of April 19, 1939]

There can be no condoning the shipping of scrap iron and other war necessaries to Japan when it is being used for imperialistic exploitation of China.

America's interest in stopping Japan is that soon or late Japan will be stepping into the Philippines, maybe using our own war materials to enforce seizure of the islands.

[From the Alliance (Ohio) Review of June 26, 1939]
The spectacle of congressional confusion on foreign policy encourages Japan.

It happens that Japan is extremely vulnerable to the kind of nonmilitary pressure which the United States could easily apply against her. More than half of all the strategic raw materials that Japan needs for the conduct of the undeclared war on China comes from the United States.

The Japanese do not underestimate the strength and importance of the United States. That is left for overtimerous Members of Congress.

[From the Detroit (Mich.) Evening News of March 12, 1939]

We in America, however, need nothing but determination to stop us from helping Japan conquer China. Our denunciation of the dictators and pressure for the open door would come with better grace from a nation that was not supplying Japan with a large share of raw materials, without which her chances of whipping China would dwindle considerably.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post Intelligencer of March 24, 1939] Japan's warfare against China already has injured Pacific coast

Japan's warfare against China already has injured Pacific coast business severely.

It is daily growing more evident that one phase of the business that still exists—the shipment of scrap iron for replenishment of Japanese armaments—is repugnant to the conscience of our people. Insistence upon continuance of this traffic holds a menace far outweighing the possible monetary profits.

It is time that this viewpoint should be expressed at Washington by members of the Pacific coast congressional delegations, with the full support of their constituents.

The only practicable solution is to embargo scrap iron.

[From the Baltimore (Md.) Morning Sun of March 12, 1939]

Nobody, surely not China, is asking us to send an army to rescue China or even to take a long-shot chance of becoming involved in a war. But it does not seem unreasonable to withdraw from our partnership with Japan, which we cannot do until we recover from the Nye notion that the United States of America must continue a foreign policy consisting in raising the hands in holy horror over the conduct of "both sides" while we supply copper and trucks and chemicals to the side whose triumph is rightly feared by our diplomats and our people.

[From the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch of February 11, 1939]

The results of our present policy are painfully clear. The story The results of our present policy are painfully clear. The story of how we fueled Japan's war machine during the conquest of coastal China has been told before. Most of Japan's steel shortage is made up by United States shipments. All of its special steel alloys come from this country. We supply over 90 percent of Japan's oil, copper, and scrap imports. Its 1938 scrap purchases, thanks to 500,000 tons bought after Canton fell, closely approximate the 1937 record of 2,000,000 tons. Its copper buying in 10 months of 1938 exceeded that for all 1937.

[From the Burlington (Vt.) Free Press of February 14, 1939]

Burlington is getting organized to join in the growing movement throughout the country to stop shipments of war materials to Japan, and to stop the purchase of Japanese goods which are playing a large part in financing the Japanese invasion of China. It is stated on the authority of figures assembled by the Department of Commerce that 90 percent of the automobiles and trucks used by the Japanese were imported from the United States. Statistics gathered by competent authority show that 54 percent of all Japanese war materials were imported from the United States.

[From the Elkhart (Ind.) Truth of February 9, 1939]

Sympathizing with the Chinese as they do, most Americans do not realize that it is conservatively estimated that the United States has contributed $300,000,000 or more of war materials to Japan for its murderous assault on China.

While of late our State Department has discouraged the sale of airplanes to Japan, scrap iron, cotton, and other materials have been going to that country in large quantities.

[From the Roanoke (Va.) World of February 23, 1939]

[From the Roanoke (Va.) World of February 23, 1939]
During the past 5 years, 12,000,000 tons of scrap iron have been exported from the United States, of which Japan has taken 7,500,000 tons, or nearly two-thirds. Without that metal, it is asserted, Japan could not have conducted its war of destruction in China. At the very time we are arming against Japanese aggression, constructing new battleships and discussing new naval bases, we are supplying Japan with one of the most essential elements of war making, an element in which Japan is most deficient. The exportation of scrap is still going on. Large fortunes have been made in America by reason of the world market for scrap. And each cargo of scrap metal shipped from our shores has drawn just that much away from the supply necessary for our own defense. our own defense.

[From the Washington Post of February 23, 1939]

[From the Washington Post of February 23, 1939]

Had we refused to supply Japan with a virtually unlimited amount of scrap metal, it is almost certain that that country could not have prosecuted its ruthless campaign in China. We have, under the cloak of neutrality, not only made it possible for "our next probable enemy" to obtain essential materials for war against one of our friends but have at the same time cut seriously into our own supply of materials that would be urgently needed if we were confronted with a sudden emergency. We have been guilty of a tragic inconsistency in this matter—as we have in the matter of supplying Japan with other munitions—bitterly deploring Japanese savagery in China while permitting the aggressor without interruption to draw upon us for the materials which have made that aggression possible.

[From the Springfield (Ohio) News of February 14, 1939]

Twelve million tons of scrap iron have been exported from the United States in the last 5 years. Seven and a half million of these tons have gone to Japan. Japan has bled China with the scrap iron which we supplied.

In return for our iron Japan sent us mostly silk and shipped us some gold.

The silk wore out. The gold was buried in the Kentucky hills. The scrap iron was lost forever to the United States. It was shot away in Japan's war.

The transaction stands a total loss, the ruin of China being the deepest item in the "red."

[From the La Porte (Ind.) Herald of February 18, 1939]

Another voice has been raised against the shipment of scrap iron Another voice has been raised against the shipment of scrap iron from our shores to Japan where it is eagerly sought to help carry on the conquest in China. Most of the cries of protest have come from individuals whose humanitarian feelings revolted against having the United States in the role of aider and abettor of war, of profiting in human blood and suffering. The statistics show that our sale of scrap iron to Japan grew by leaps and bounds after the conquest of China began. The Japanese needed the metal for carrying on the war, being short on iron and steel of all kinds. The new voice who protests against our continued shipping of scrap metal to Japan or any place is Emory E. Smith, dollar-a-year Commissioner for the War Industries Board. The wholesale exporting of scrap iron is weakening our own position, he claims, until in case we should become involved in any war the shortage of scrap iron might tell the story against us.

[From the Sioux City (Iowa) Journal of March 9, 1939]

It is common sense to say that embargoes on goods to Japan and a free flow of goods to China would have protected American interests in the Far East through making the Tokyo Government aggressive campaign against the Chinese more difficult. So the Neutrality Act operated not only against China's interests but against

[From the Albion (Mich.) Recorder of February 20, 1939]

We are now selling Japan more than 54 percent of the military supplies and munitions that enable her to carry on the aggression against China, and that without our help Japan could not continue. Some of these same munitions of American origin are even causing death and suffering to Americans in Chinese territory and damage to American property. At the same time, our Government is building up a vast military and naval machine to combat the very Japanese threat to supremacy in the Pacific it is aiding by allowing export of military supplies to Japan. There's something decidedly wrong in this picture.

[From the Athens (Ga.) Herald of March 8, 1939]

Congress should enact a law placing an embargo on the sale of scrap iron to foreign countries. It is a well-known fact that practically all of these nations making potential purchases are engaged in war or are preparing for fortifying themselves against attacks or defense for self-preservation.

While, of course, the American people are desirous of making every dollar they can by sales of all kinds of products, the sale of scrap iron is entirely different from the sale of commercial products to these countries.

[From the Morgantown (W. Va.) Dominion of March 9, 1939]

Italy, Japan, and Germany have been the big purchasers of scrap iron, the basic material for war munitions. Some exports claim that had we refused to sell scrap iron to the three nations named there would have been no war in China, no threat of war in Europe, because the nations mentioned could not have afforded to provide their war materials from metals available only from ores found in their own territories.

[From the Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram of March 14, 1939]

The nonofficial position that the United States has actually held toward nations at war in recent years has been both ridiculous and hypocritical. Lip service has been given to "righteous causes" in the Orient and in Europe, while American trade has poured millions of tons of iron and steel into Japan, Germany, and Italy. Other materials and supplies essential to the conduct of war has Other materials and supplies essential to the conduct of war has been furnished aggressors openly regarded as potential enemies of this country. The attitude is the same as that of the individual who professes loyalty to ideals which he ignores in the so-called necessities of daily living.

[From the Kansas City (Mo.) Times of March 10, 1939]

But the situation remained unhappy because there was no way of preventing Japan from buying essential war materials in this country and taking them home, while it was almost impossible for China to do this. America thus has seen Chinese cities bombed with airplanes driven by American gasoline and Chinese soldiers and civilians shot down with arms and munitions manufactured from American scrap iron.

Here has been a dramatic illustration of the impossibility of framing rigid legislation to apply to American relations with a rapidly changing world.

[From the Winchester (Va.) Star of January 27, 1939]

Worst of all, citizens of the United States are aiding Japan to destroy China. While Americans condemn the Japanese outrages in China and its cruelties to helpless civilians, as well as the insoin China and its cruelties to helpless civilians, as well as the insolent attitude of Japan toward us, we go ahead, for dollars, supplying that nation with the sinews of war—scrap iron, oil, steel, trucks—all more necessary to her than manufactured munitions. While we spend billions of dollars for armaments to protect us against the threats of such nations as Germany and Japan, we ship them supplies with which they can carry out their ambitions and menace our own security. This does not make sense.

We have not only the moral duty to stop this but the legal right, since Japan is warring upon China in violation of a solemn treaty of peace, of which the United States is a party.

[From the Salt Lake City (Utah) Deseret News of February 24, 1939] The American people from the beginning of the Japanese invasion of China should have demanded with united voice that America should not be a sharer in Japan's war guilt. Aiding Japan to conquer China does not make sense, neither does it make right or justice. It violates the moral sense of the American people.

[From the Atlanta (Ga.) Journal of January 26, 1939] It is sheer folly for American factories to supply Japan with a large part of the munitions for her savage attack on China's independence.

[From the Washington (N. C.) Progress of January 25, 1939] Millions of people in this country have not been able to reconcile the well nigh universal abhorrence of Japanese ruthlessness in China with the almost complete freedom with which Japan has continued to purchase war supplies in America.

[From the Bluefield (W. Va.) Telegraph of January 24, 1939]

If it is this Nation's foreign policy in this particular case to say we do not approve and endorse Japan's aggression in China and the implications thereof, then we certainly should not contribute as a people to such aggression.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Star of January 22, 1939]

Uncle Sam is the world's great purveyor of one of the basic raw stuffs from which death-dealing implements of war are fabricated.

But it seems inconsistent that we should be furnishing certain potential enemies of the United States with the basic material for weapons that may some day be turned against these shores and our own officers. own citizens.

[From the Monrovia (Calif.) Journal of January 26, 1939]

The American attitude toward the Japanese militarists is as well known in Tokyo as it is here, and these facts, therefore, will not come as news to the Nippon leaders. What is significant, however, is that the United States, as well as other nations, may actually take a vital part in a conflict between two foreign countries without sending armed forces abroad. Economic sanctions, indeed, may prove to be one of the most important measures for maintaining world peace.

[From the Lenoir (N. C.) Topic of January 13, 1939]

Japan has secured millions upon millions of dollars in supplies, consisting of junk and other war materials, with which they have waged ruthless war upon China while America has become horrified at the atrocities and murderous destruction of innocent men, women, and children in China. Destruction wrought by the very material they purchased from us.

[From the Durham (N. C.) Sun of February 6, 1939]

While, then, we are becoming more jittery year by year over the tension between this country and Japan, we are definitely making it possible for Japan to acquire military and economic status which make her dangerous to our own interests. Without the supplies sold Japan by the United States Japan could not approach the military strength it has reached and the potential strength which impends. Japan could not conquer and so command a vast range of raw materials and a great reservoir of bond-servant labor.

Since here in America we do not hesitate to take any economic Since here in America we do not hesitate to take any economic advantage, even to buying Japanese goods while our own mils close down, there is not reason to believe why the Japanese, whom we consider less enlightened, will seize every advantage. If we cut off Japan's American supplies, we shall lose some money. If we do not, however, we may see our entire economic system shaken to its roots. Is it that we do not care about the America of the future? Do we discuss the dealth records in the transfer of the control dismiss the dark prospect with the mental reflection that it will not come until we have passed on? Do we simply intend to grab all we can for ourselves while we live, confident that we shall be dead before the consequences fall?

[From the Springfield (Ohio) News of February 6, 1939]

American scrap iron is fighting Japan's war against the Chinese. Our junked automobiles and other metal worn-out things cross to the West by the trainload for transshipment to the Japanese factories which turn our junk into instruments of death.

[From the Youngstown (Ohio) Vindicator-Telegraph of January 14, 1939]

Shipments of steel scrap and other war materials are still going to Japan, and most Americans would be pleased to have Mr. Hull extend his request, so that our assistance would be denied any nation which bombs civilians.

[From the Carrolltown (Pa.) News of February 16, 1939]

The Congressmen who are so concerned over the shipment of planes to France do not seem to be worried about the purchases of oil that Japan is making in this country. Neither did they tear their hair about the immense quantities of scrap iron that Japan bought in this country evidently in preparation for her attack upon China.

[From the Jackson (Mich.) Citizen-Patriot of January 21, 19391

A complete shut-down on the shipment of all war materials to Japan by United States, France, and England will be more effective than all the notes sent so far, and there have been plenty of them.

[From the Sheridan (Wyo.) Press of January 27, 1939]

The realization is spreading over the country that for some time we have been very greatly helping the Japanese conquest of China by furnishing to Japan material and supplies without which she could not conduct her Chinese campaign and which she probably could not get in sufficient quantities from any other country at this time. That is not a welcome thought to the majority of our people who not only sympathize with the Chinese but also do not look with complacence on the prospect of an aggressive and ambitious Japan dominating the Far East.

[From the Staunton (Va.) Leader of January 28, 1939]

Popular opinion is against furnishing war supplies to Japan and to do so while we simultaneously protest against air attacks on Chinese cities and extend credits to China is inconsistent, doing violence to our sympathies with China.

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle of December 21, 1938] By denying the United States free trade with China Japan can hardly be placing herself in the category of "friendly" nations, and therefore should not regard as strange any friendly gesture that this country made with respect to China.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have said repeatedly that I do not present this matter from the point of view of our interest in China, and I do not present it from that point of view. However, I have heard the statement made that as a result of any action upon our part we would lose our cotton business in China, and I present data, not in the nature of an affirmative argument but in answer to those who are interested from the point of view of cotton. I shall not read it. But I ask permission to have placed in the RECORD two brief studies made by the Department of Agriculture and one argument in the magazine Contemporary Manchuria, found on page 44 of that magazine for January of this year, entitled "The Cotton Industry in North China."

There being no objection, the two studies and the article referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRENDS AND POSSIBILITIES OF COTTON PRODUCTION IN CHINA (By Fred J. Rossiter, agricultural economist, Bureau of Agricultural Economics)

China is the third most important cotton-producing country, being exceeded only by the United States and India. Cotton production in China has increased more than a million bales during the past 5 years. This recent expansion has become an important factor in reducing the demand for American and other growths, which China had been consuming largely in the form of imported cloth. The total amount of cotton piece goods, yarn, and raw cotton imported annually into China from 1900 to 1932 averaged the equivalent of more than 1,250,000 bales of raw cotton. During the past 2 years imports into China of cotton goods and raw cotton have almost ceased.

It is important to ascertain what brought about this increase in production and to see what the possibilities are as to further expansion. Is it possible for cotton production in China to increase beyond domestic needs and compete with other cotton on the world market?

the world market?

During the past 15 years China's raw-cotton consumption has totaled about 3.5 million bales annually. The Chinese cotton crop in 1936 was placed at 3,870,000 bales. An early estimate of the 1937 production was 4,400,000 bales, but this estimate is expected to be revised downward materially, possibly to as low as 3,600,000 bales, as a result of excessive, late rains and military activities in some of the important producing districts. Thus China's production is already slightly in excess of domestic needs. Furthermore, in most producing sections in China cotton is still a minor crop. Soil and climatic condition in many parts are suitable for cotton growing, and, with abundance of labor and other favorable economic factors and a continuation of cotton improvement work, it is possible for cotton production to be increased provement work, it is possible for cotton production to be increased considerably.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

China has been producing cotton for centuries. In an old Chinese classic written about 2205 B. C., mention is made of cotton as having been used in the manufacture of cloth and given as tribute to the rulers of the "Middle Kingdom."

During the last half of the eighteenth century, records of shipping companies indicate that China was exporting cotton piece goods to Europe and America, so that China at that time evidently had a supply of raw cotton in excess of domestic requirements. By about 1800, however, a small amount of raw cotton was imported annually, which possibly offset the piece goods exported at that time. After 1820 and during the remainder of the nineteenth century, China was deficient in the supply of raw cotton, as total imports of cotton goods and raw cotton exceed exports. Cotton production evidently did not keep pace with the demand during this period when the population was increasing rapidly. rapidly.
Foreign trade statistics for China indicate that imports of cotton piece goods and yarn in 1900 amounted to the equivalent of 1,000,000 bales of raw cotton. Since the Chinese population at that time was estimated at 400,000,000, China must, in addition, have been producing at least 1,500,000 bales of raw cotton to clothe this number of people.

RAPID INCREASE IN PRODUCTION SINCE 1932

Estimates of Chinese cotton acreage and production are available since 1920. These estimates, though perhaps somewhat incomplete for the earlier years, are continuous and give some indication of the trend. Without census data or land surveys, it is im-tion of the trend. Without census data or land surveys, it is impossible to obtain accurate data. But the figures for the important producing provinces are believed to be fairly reliable.

Information available concerning the amount of Chinese raw cotton consumed by the modern spinning mills in China and the amount of raw cotton exported serves as a guide for production estimates. A large quantity of cotton is known to be used in home consumption, but accurate statistics are lacking. The severe winters and shortage of fuel north of the Yangtze River have given rise to the utilization of considerable raw cotton in padded winter garments and in so-called padded blankets. Raw cotton is still used for home spinning in the more remote sections cotton is still used for home spinning in the more remote sections of China.

China's cotton acreage from 1920 to 1931 averaged about five and one-half million acres, equal to about 15 percent of the United States acreage. During this period Chinese acreage showed no definite trend; but, beginning in 1932 and continuing into 1937, the acreage rapidly increased. Last year it was equivalent to about 25 percent of the acreage harvested in the United States States.

Production of Chinese cotton, which fluctuated around 2,400,000 bales from 1920 to 1931, was equal to about 55 percent of the Indian crop for this period and 20 percent of the United States harvest. As a result of increased production, the Chinese harvest for the year 1936 equaled 70 percent of the Indian crop and over 30 percent of the United States harvest.

The yield per acre of Chinese cotton from 1920 to date shows no definite trend and only a slight variation from year to year, as compared with yields of most countries. This relative stability in yields is partially accounted for by the fact that, if a cottonfield gets a poor start in the spring, the farmer usually puts in a catch crop in place of the cotton; whereas, if a crop gets a fairly good start, the summer weather is generally favorable for producing at least an average harvest. Furthermore, the Chinese farmer seldom experiences disastrous diseases or insect infestation, at least not on as large a scale as in some countries.

The yield per acre in China, as a result of intensive culture, averages higher than in the United States. The mature cotton plants are smaller in size than those in this country, but they are planted much closer together and, in addition, the crop is picked ever few days, with the result that there is little loss in harvesting.

MAJOR PRODUCING REGIONS

China has two rather distinct cotton-producing regions—the Yangtze Valley and North China. In addition, there are small producing districts between these two main regions and also a number of districts growing a small amount of cotton scattered over other parts of China. In the two principal producing regions, the basic factors affecting cotton production, such as climate, soils, and cropping systems, are materially different. Weather conditions that are favorable in one region are often unfavorable in the other. In the Yangtze Valley, cotton and a second crop are regularly produced on the same land each year. In North China, when cotton is grown, only one crop is raised per year. The recent expansion in cotton acreage has taken place largely in the North China region.

Yangtze Valley

The Yangtze Valley, which is in about the same latitude as southern Georgia, has been an important cotton-producing region for a long time. Two decades ago, this region furnished a large supply of commercial cotton. Of the 34 cotton-spinning mills in operation in China at that time, all but 2 were located in the Yangtze Valley.

The most intensive cotton-growing area is found along the Yangtze River in the Nantungchow district of Kiangsu Province. This Province has for many years been the leading producer of cotton. Cotton growing is also fairly extensive on the south bank of the Yangtze River and surrounding the city of Shanghai.

The second most important cotton-producing area in the Yangtze Valley is west and northwest of Hankow in Hupeh Province.

Province.

In Chekiang Province, along the south bank of Hangchow Bay, is a small area where production is intensive. Cotton produced in this section matures earlier than elsewhere in China and usually reaches the Shanghai market about the first of September.

A few cotton-producing districts are located at Anhwei, Kiangsi, Hunan, and Szechwan Provinces, but these sections supply only a small part of the commercial staple consumed in the modern spinning mills. A marked expansion in cotton acreage has taken place in recent years in northern Hunan.

North China

The north China cotton region is in about the same latitude as North Carolina and the southern half of Virginia. Production in this region is heavily concentrated in the Yellow River Valley.

³ Many observations in this article are based on field investiga-tions made by the writer from 1931 to 1936, while stationed at Shanghai.

The heaviest producing area is in southern Hopei, northwest Shantung, and northern Honan Provinces. Another important cotton-growing area in the Yellow River Valley is in northwest thonan, southern Shansi, and eastern Shensi. China's long steple comes from this area, and during the past few years a considerable expansion in acreage has taken place in Shensi Province.

Minor producing areas in the north China region are north-central Shantung Province and the Tientsin area. These two districts are of particular importance, as the recent expansion has consisted largely of improved staple.

Manchuria

Some consideration should be given to Manchuria because of the recent efforts to increase production in this area. Climate, soil, and cropping conditions are somewhat different from those in north China. The soil is more fertile, the growing season shorter, and rainfall somewhat more certain than in north China. shorter, and rainfall somewhat more certain than in north China. In general, only one crop is grown in Manchuria per year. Manchuria has been growing native types of cotton for many years and producing approximately 40,000 to 50,000 bales each year. As a result of a great deal of effort by the new government in Manchuria to increase production and improve the staple, the cotton crop has been increased to approximately 90,000 bales; government officials plan to increase production within 15 years to approximately 400,000 bales. Private concerns, however, have lost interest in Manchuria as a supplier of raw cotton because production has increased so slowly, despite the heavy investments already made.

PHYSICAL FACTORS AFFECTING PRODUCTION

As far as physical factors, such as rainfall, temperature, and soil, are concerned, China appears to be well adapted to cotton production. Most of the sections in the Yangtze Valley region are suitable for cotton growing, and in North China the temperature and soil are fairly well adapted, although rainfall is somewhat uncertain.

Much of the total area in China is mountainous, but practically all of the cotton is produced at an altitude of less than 500 feet. The only exceptions are small acreages in south China, Yunnan Province, and part of the acreage in Szechwan Province. In some sections of the Yangtze Valley and in north China cotton is grown on lowlands, which are usually flooded in years of excessive rainfall.

Climate and soil generally favorable

The amount of rainfall in the Yangtze Valley corresponds with that of the eastern Cotton Belt of the United States. The annual amount averages 45 to 50 inches and is well distributed seasonally for cotton production. While the average annual distribution appears nearly ideal, the year-to-year distribution is irregular.

Excessive rainfall and droughts frequently damage the cotton crop in some of the important areas in the Yangtze Valley region. Too much rainfall damages the crop on the low-lying fields, where poor drainage exists. On the other hand, a dry period exceeding 2 or 3 weeks during the summer months seriously injures the cotton plants, as the temperature is usually high and the moisture is not retained so long as in some countries because of the lack of organic matter in the soil. In several sections, however, farmers irrigate their fields by pumping water from streams or canals when rainfall is deficient. In the Yangtze Delta typhoons (severe wind and rainstorms) occur in some years and cause considerable damage to the cotton crop

In the north China cotton region, the annual rainfall amounts Texas. Although the annual precipitation is low, the average distribution is quite well suited for cotton growing, approximately 70 percent occurring during June, July, and August. While the average annual distribution is satisfactory, the year-to-year uncertainty in this region is a very important factor in determining the cotton acreage in any particular year. Most areas of North China are subject to the possibility of insufficient moisture in April and May, and often the summer rains do not come until the middle of July. Under such conditions cotton acreage is materially reduced. Such a reduction occurred in 1935, when the intentions to plant pointed to an acreage above that of the preceding year but, as a result of the dry weather during May and June, the actual acreage was substantially lower. On the other hand, July and August rains are sometimes excessive and result in floods, which damage the crops in some localities.

Well irrigation, which was promoted by the China International

Well irrigation, which was promoted by the China International Famine Relief Commission about 16 years ago, has become quite common in many districts in Hopei and has developed to some extent in other Provinces in north China. A farmer having a good well is usually able to obtain a satisfactory cotton crop each year. In a few districts approximately 50 percent of the farmers have wells but the arrest many sections only a few wells have have wells, but in a great many sections only a few wells have been dug. Many farmers in north China lack sufficient capital for digging a well, the average cost of which is estimated to be around $50.

Temperature in the Yangtze Valley and north China regions is amply warm, and the growing season is sufficiently long in most sections to insure suitable cotton production. In all sections of China the cotton plants, in general, cease growing and dry up during the last half of September, variable weather having but little effect.

The temperature in the Yangtze Valley is very similar to that in southern Georgia though the spring months are slightly cooler. In central China, however, summer months are somewhat warmer and winters are colder in comparison with seasons in the same latitude in the United States. The average period free from frost in the Yangtze Valley is over 250 days, or slightly longer than in couthern Georgia southern Georgia.

In North China, the temperature in the spring months is similar to that of North Carolina and Virginia. The summer months in North China, especially inland from the coast, are warmer and the winters colder in comparison with these States. Contrary to general opinion, the season free from frost in North China is not too short for cotton production. It averages about 225 days, or nearly the same as in North Carolina and Virginia. It is true that the lack of sufficient moisture in the early summer months often retards the growth of the cotton plants. Furthermore, imported American cottonseed, before becoming acclimatized, often fails to Chinese cotton is produced on soils largely of alluvial deposits, which have a good mechanical texture but are low in fertility and organic matter. In both of the major producing regions, the crop is grown on what is considered good farm land. The production of most of the cotton on alluvial soils is further evidence that the crop is raised largely at a low altitude.

the crop is raised largely at a lew altitude.

In the Yangtze Valley the soils are principally of a gray alluvial type, especially those west of Hankow and near Shanghai. In the Yangtze delta along the seacoast are saline alluvial deposits where the heavy cotton-producing section of Nantungchow is located. This type of soil is found also in the cotton district on the south bank of Hangchow Bay in Chektang Province. Most soils in the cotton sections of the Yangtze are acid.

The principal soil of the North China cotton-producing region is a brown calcareous alluvial deposit found in central and southern Hopei, northern and western Shantung, and northern Honan. This type of soil has been washed down by the Yellow River from the loess deposits of the west. In northwest Honan, Shansi, and Shensi Provinces, cotton is grown on a chestnut loess soil. The loess deposits are fairly deep, with the result that most of the cotton produced in this section is grown on land with a slight elevation. In the Tientsin area, most of the cotton is produced on a college classifier. saline alluvial type of soil.

Cultural practices

Cultural practices

Cotton planting and harvesting in the two major producing regions occur at approximately the same dates. Planting is usually begun about the 1st of May, although wet weather in some localities in the Yangtze Valley and the lack of moisture in north China may make later planting necessary. It is possible to plant cotton up to the end of May. If moisture conditions are not suitable by that time, some other crop is eventually planted.

In many sections of the Yangtze Valley cottonseed is commonly broadcast in the wheat or barley crop. When the grain crop is harvested the last of May or the 1st of June, the young cotton plants are from 1 to 3 inches high. In north China the cotton-fields are spring-plowed and harrowed and the seed is planted by hand in rows. The principal cultivation in both regions is hoeing by hand. Well irrigation in north China requires considerable work. The water from the wells is brought up by small containers attached to an endless chain, which is operated by a power wheel pulled by a donkey, horse, or cow. A number of farmers, however, pull the water up by means of a hand windlass.

Various kinds of fertilizers are used for the cotton crop. The Chinese have a saying, "If seeds are planted, feed must be provided for the young plants." Barnyard manure, canal and pond mud, ashes, and, to a limited extent, vegetable ollseed cakes are some of the common fertilizers used. The oilseed cakes, however, are used more extensively for rice and wheat, which generally give a higher return per acre.

Picking the cotton crop in China is work at which all members return per acre.

Picking the cotton crop in China is work at which all members of the family lend a hand. Several pickings are made during the season, but fully 70 percent of the crop is harvested during the month of September. In Chekiang Province, where cotton matures the earliest, the first picking begins about the middle of August. Late pickings in north China end in early October.

ECONOMIC FACTORS LIMIT COTTON ACREAGE

Though physical factors are reasonably favorable to cotton production in China, economic factors account for the fact that only a small percentage of the cultivated land in China is today producing cotton.

The density of population is estimated at about 1,560 people per square mile of cultivated land as compared with 200 in the United States. This fact makes it necessary for the Chinese people to use a very large percentage of their land for producing food for human consumption. Even in the heaviest cotton-producing section, Nantungchow, it is estimated that on an average only 33 percent of the land is in cotton. No estimates are available to indicate the amount of cultivated land in the two major cotton regions that is used for cotton production but compacting that is used for cotton production but compacting the contract of the state of the cotton production but compacting the contract of the cotton production but compacting the cotton production but compacting the cotton contract of the cotton production but compacting the cotton contract of the cotton cotton contract of the cotton cotton contract of the cotton cotton cotton cotton. cotton regions that is used for cotton production, but crop estimates would indicate it to be less than 5 percent. This compares with over 40 percent of the cropland in the nine Cotton Belt States of the United States. Approximately 90 percent of the cultivated land in China is used for producing food for human consumption, and small percentages are in tobacco, hemp, ramie, mulberry trees, etc. No cultivable land is left in hay or pasture, nor is any used for producing feed for livestock.

nor is any used for producing feed for livestock.

In land utilization cotton occupies a minor place in both producing regions. In the Yangtze Valley, two separate crops are produced on most of the land each year. Cotton is grown in competition with other summer crops, such as rice and soybeans. Winter wheat is the most important winter crop, while barley, broadbeans, rapeseed, and peas are also grown extensively during the winter season. Rice is considered the most profitable crop. Some farmers, however, raise cotton or beans, since rice is more expensive to produce in that it requires much greater amounts of labor and fertilizer. labor and fertilizer.

In North China, about 50 percent of the land is in winter wheat each year. The other half is fallowed during the winter and in the spring such crops as kaoliang (grain sorghum), millet, and cotton are planted. Kaoliang and millet are harvested in time for seeding winter wheat, but in this region cotton requires the entire season. Summer crops, such as soybeans, millet, peanuts, sweet-potatoes, and corn, are planted after the winter wheat is harvested. Cotton, in some sections, is grown on the same land each year, but it is more common in a 2- or 3-year rotation.

The amount of cotton planted each year depends not only on climatic conditions but also, to a certain extent, on the price of cotton in comparison with other crops. When food prices are high in relation to cotton, or vice versa, it is believed the Chinese farmer makes a shift in the crops planted. Available information giving acreages of various crops from year to year is not sufficient to judge the extent of the shifts in plantings caused by changes in farm-price relationships. Agricultural prices at Shanghai, according to table 5, indicate that in the autumns of 1935 and 1936, raw-cotton prices were more favorable than those of rice and raw-cotton prices were more favorable than those of rice and peanuts, compared with prices of previous years. Whether there was a decrease in the acreage of rice and peanuts the following year is not known, but estimates of cotton acreage for China show large increases in 1936 and 1937.

In spite of good prices for cash crops such as cotton, the Chinese farmer's first goal is to produce sufficient food for himself and his family. Most farmers carry only a small reserve supply and have but little cash with which to purchase food in years of poor crops. With inadequate transportation facilities, food prices are always very high in years of crop failure. In the North China region, therefore, where crop production is somewhat uncertain, the average farmer grows a variety of crops and does not put in so large a cotton acreage as he probably would if he lived in an area with a more dependable climate. If ample food supplies were assured, the Chinese farmer would undoubtedly be willing to grow proportionately more cotton.

assured, the Chinese farmer would undoubtedly be willing to grow proportionately more cotton.

An attractive price, nevertheless, induces farmers to plant cotton. The price of Chinese cotton is, of course, affected by supply and demand conditions in China. Since comparatively small quantities of cotton are exported at the present time, the demand is determined largely by the activities of the modern spinning mills in China. This demand, in turn, depends upon the market for yarn, which is affected materially by economic conditions in the country, such as favorable crops, level of farm prices, and stability of the Government.

In general however, prices of Chinese cotton follow the trend.

stability of the Government.

In general, however, prices of Chinese cotton follow the trend of world prices. Prices of foreign growths at Shanghai are affected by changes in import duties and fluctuations in foreign exchange. For example, when Indian and United States currencies were devalued, prices of foreign cotton became cheaper in Chinese currency. In 1935, when Chinese currency was devalued, prices of foreign cotton became proportionately higher at Shanghai. The Chinese Government, by raising the import duty on raw cotton from 42 cents per 100 pounds 'in 1929 to $1.72 in 1934, increased the cost of foreign cotton in China and thereby raised the price of domestic staple. During recent years, the price of Chinese cotton has followed rather closely the price of Indian Akola at Shanghai, with the Chinese staple usually remaining slightly below the price of Indian. When prices of Indian Akola at Shanghai become cheaper, cotton mills begin to buy Indian staple.

MARKETING METHODS AND MARKET CENTERS

MARKETING METHODS AND MARKET CENTERS

Marketing Methods and Market centers

Marketing of cotton in China requires a great deal more labor than in the United States, and methods are relatively inefficient. Most of the ginning is done in the home during the fall and winter when there is little demand for farm labor, by means of a spike gin operated by the foot. Only in remote places is the seed separated from the lint by hand. Near some of the cotton centers, farmers sell their seed cotton to a central gin. The majority sell their ginned cotton to a local buyer, who, in turn, sells to a visiting middleman to ship to a concentration point or to a central market. Cooperative marketing has been undertaken by farmers in a few districts during the past few years.

After the cotton is ginned, it is tied up by a home-made press into a native bale varying in weight from 100 to 150 pounds. If the cotton is consumed in a nearby locality, it is sold to the mills in the native bales. Cotton produced in distant sections is brought to central marketing points, where it is usually resold, taken to modern presses for putting into bales of 300 to 400 pounds, and then shipped to the consuming centers.

There are five principal cotton-marketing centers in China; namely Shanghai, Hankow, Tientsin, Tsinan, and Chengchow. At each center are several cotton dealers, who have large warehouses for storing cotton. Most of these dealers are financed by the leading Chinese banks.

leading Chinese banks.

Shanghai, which is the largest market, receives cotton from all parts of China. Fifty-two percent of the country's cotton spindles are located there. Prices paid at Shanghai usually determine are located there. Prices paid at Shanghai usually determine prices paid at other centers.

Hankow is the market for cotton produced in the upper Yangtze Valley and receives a small amount by railroad from Honan and Shensi Provinces in the North China region. Hankow, having only six cotton mills, has a considerable excess of raw cotton. Several modern press packing plants located there re-press the surplus and ship it to Shanghai.

⁴ This includes import duty, customs surtax, flood-relief surtax, and conservancy fees.

Chengchow, located at the junction of the east-west and north-south rallways in Honan Province, is an important cotton center. A large percentage of the cotton grown in western Honan and Shensi Provinces is sold at Chengchow, where it is re-pressed before shipment to Shanghai, Hankow, or Tsingtao. Markets like Cheng-chow receive hourly radio cotton quotations from the Shanghai Cotton Exchange.

Cotton Exchange.

Tsinan, in Shantung Province, also located at a railroad junction, is a market for cotton produced in the western part of the Province. While there are three cotton-spinning mills at Tsinan, considerable quantities of raw cotton are shipped to Tsingtao and some to Shanghai.

Tientsin has long been a cotton market, receiving cotton from most of the districts of Hopel, some from northwest Shantung, northern Honan, and Shensi Provinces. Tientsin has for many years exported a type of cotton produced in Hopel and desired in

The cost of marketing cotton is high because of the many middlemen and the lack of adequate transportation facilities. This is especially true of cotton produced inland from railroads and waterways.

QUALITY OF COTTON HAS IMPROVED

Chinese cotton has long been known for its short staple and poor

Chinese cotton has long been known for its short staple and poor spinning qualities. There are, however, many degrees of quality and lengths of staple grown in China, although there is no reliable information as to the quantities of the various grades produced. Staple produced from Chinese seed that has been native to the country for a long period is short in length, and until recent years little effort has been made to improve Chinese cotton. In the last few years considerable work has been done to improve the staple and during 1937 cotton produced in China was used almost entirely for spinning yarn up to 40 count. A few years ago most of it was suitable only for spinning yarn of 16 count and below.

In staple length the bulk of native cotton produced is from one-half to three-fourths inch. The best native cotton produced in the Yangtze Valley is in the Nantunchow area, and averages about three-fourths inch in length. The native staple of the Hankow area averages about five-eighths inch. Most of the native cotton grown in North China has been short in staple and of poor quality.

A type known as rough cotton has been produced in Hopei Province for many years in fairly large quantities. A small volume of rough cotton also has been produced in northeastern Hupeh Province. This type, about one-half inch in length, is wiry in character and has not been used to any extent by modern power spinning mills, except possibly for 10- to 12-count yarn. It has, however, been in demand in foreign countries for padding and for mixing with wool. At times it has commanded higher prices than improved American cotton in some of the world markets. The yield per acre of this type, however, is relatively low, and production has declined rather rapidly in recent years, as farmers have shifted to improved varieties.

An improved staple has been grown for several years in northwest improved varieties.

An improved staple has been grown for several years in northwest Honan and Shensi Provinces which has been called German cotton. This cotton is from American seed introduced by German missionaries some 20 or 30 years ago. Although the seed has degenerated, cotton produced in this area is considered one of the best staples in China and is known as Lingpao.

Also in Shensi Province, the Government has been active in distributing improved cottonseed. The improvement work has been more noticeable in north China as a result of the expansion in acreage and the shift from the rough type to the improved staple production.

Improved cottonseed has also been distributed to farmers in the Yangtze region, but to a lesser extent than in the north. Some improvement work has taken place in practically every cotton-producing Province in the Yangtze, the largest amount probably in Hupeh Province.

No statistics are available that indicate the amount of improved No statistics are available that indicate the amount of improved cotton being produced. In the Yangtze Valley there is a considerable quantity of approximately three-fourths inch staple being produced, but that above seven-eighths inch in length is still quite limited. In north China improved cotton with a staple length of three-fourths inch or longer is now being produced in several districts of Shantung and Hopei Provinces and in western Honan, but the annual quantity probably does not exceed 400,000 bales. The improved seed that has been distributed in recent years may, however, result in larger production of improved-quality cotton during the next few years, both in north China and in the Yangtze region.

DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION OF RAW COTTON INCREASING

The increased consumption of Chinese cotton and the decreased consumption of foreign cotton, directly and indirectly, in China during the past 18 years are more pronounced than the increased production. An examination of these trends brings out striking results in the loss of the market for American and other foreign production. An examination of these trends brings out striking results in the loss of the market for American and other foreign growths. In 1921 modern spinning mills in China used about 1,000,000 bales of native staple, or 74 percent of the total consumed. During the same year China imported 470,000 bales of raw cotton, and, in addition, imported piece goods and yarn made from American and Indian growths approximately equal to 982,000 bales of raw cotton. In 1936 the spinning mills in China used 2,372,000 bales of Chinese staple, or 92 percent of the total consumption. China's imports of raw cotton in 1936 fell to 188,000 bales, and imports of cotton piece goods and yarn declined to an equivalent of approximately 44,000 bales of raw cotton. Thus the combined imports of foreign cotton and cotton textiles was equivalent to 1,452,000 bales in 1921 compared with only 232,000 bales in 1936.

A large volume of Chinese cotton is still used for home consumption in China. In the remote places spinning is still a home industry. A considerable quantity of raw cotton is used for padded garments and padded blankets. The total quantity used in home consumption has been roughly estimated at 800,000 to 1,000,000 bales annually. Since much of this cotton does not enter commercial channels, it is impossible to arrive at an accurate production figure.

Cottonseed is largely consumed within the country. In most of the heavier producing districts the oil is crushed from the seed. The oil is used largely for cooking purposes and the cake for fertilizer and, to a small extent, for feeding livestock. China for a number of years has annually exported from 60,000 to 150,000 short tons of cottonseed, the bulk of which goes to Japan. During the past 3 years China has also exported small quantities of cottonseed oil

IMPORT AND EXPORT COTTON TRADE

From 1920 to 1936 China was a net importer of raw cotton. Increased demand was created for suitable spinning cotton at the close of the World War by the construction of a large number of power spinning mills. During the period 1920-36 the spinning mills more than doubled their output of yarn. This, in turn, required a much larger quantity of desirable raw cotton and made it necessary to import from India and the United States. The large raw-cotton imports in 1931 and 1932 were attributed to the low prices of foreign staple and the short Chinese crop of 1931. China was the fourth best customer of the United States for raw cotton during 1931-32, taking 12 percent of our exports. 1931-32, taking 12 percent of our exports.

At the present time only small quantities of American and Egyptian cotton are needed in China for spinning yarns above 40 count. Small quantities of Indian cotton also are imported, generally when prices of equal grade at Shanghai are below Chinese staple. As long as the present import duty remains in effect, however, imports of foreign staple into China will probably continue to be small except in years of short Chinese crops. of short Chinese crops.

of short Chinese crops.

China has been an exporter of raw cotton for many years; prior to 1920 exports had exceeded the volume of imports for more than three decades. The bulk of cotton exported during these many years was primarily of the rough type produced in north China and shipped from Tientsin. The principal market for this type was Japan, with small quantities exported to the United States and to Europe. The decline in exports reflects the decrease in production of rough cotton. Exports reached their peak in 1927, amounting to 403,000 bales, and by 1934 had fallen to only 96,600 bales. Since 1935 there has been a gradual increase in exports. While the shipments of rough cotton to the United States have increased recently there has been an increase in staple suitable for spinning exported to Japan from both the Yangtze Valley and north China.

FACTORS CAUSING RECENT EXPANSION IN PRODUCTION

As a result of all the work that has been done to improve and increase cotton production during the last 4 years, China has now become practically self-sufficient, both as to quantity and as to quality of raw cotton.

The increase of approximately 3,000,000 acres in cotton during the period 1932 to 1937 has been accomplished largely through a shift from other crops, as probably less than 5 percent of the increase has been on new land. An increase of 3,000,000 acres planted to cotton would not appear large in the United States, but in China this amount of land diverted from food-producing crops means a decrease in the food supply at least equivalent to that required for 7,000,000 people. During recent years, China has not increased imports of food, but since 1934 has considerably reduced imports of wheat, wheat flour, and rice. Just what crops cotton has replaced is not definitely known, but it appears that they include kaoliang, soybeans, and, in some districts, peanuts. Three explanations have been offered for the adequacy of food supplies during the period of expanding cotton acreage: First, improved transportation has facilitated a freer movement of food crops from surplus areas; second, relatively peaceful conditions have prevailed in almost all sections of the country; and, third, favorable prices for farm products have stimulated more intensive cultivation.

It has been pointed out that cotton production has increased

It has been pointed out that cotton production has increased to the point where China no longer finds it necessary to consume annually more than 1,000,000 bales of foreign cotton, but is now growing a supply ample for domestic requirements at the present level of consumption. In order to have a basis for evaluating future possibilities, it is necessary to consider how this increased production has been brought about.

ENCOURAGEMENT BY DOMESTIC AGENCIES

Chinese cotton farmers have received encouragement, not only from their own Government and private agencies, but from foreign interests as well.

The most important single factor has probably been the raising The most important single factor has probably been the raising of import duties on yarn, piece goods, and raw cotton by the Chinese Government. Between 1919 and 1934, the import duty on yarn was increased six different times. The import duties on piece goods were raised five times between 1929 and 1934, a total increase of 370 percent in less than 6 years. These large duty increases resulted in a tremendous reduction in the quantity of yarn and piece goods imported. During this period, the domestic milling industry was expanded and the demand for raw cotton increased. Annual imports of yarn and piece goods prior to 1920 were equivalent to more than a million bales of raw cotton, but in 1936 they amounted to less than 50,000 bales. Likewise, the National Government from 1929 to 1934 increased the import duty on raw cotton several times.

During the world depression, China developed a very unfavor-the import duty on raw cotton several times.

During the world depression, China developed a very unfavorable balance of trade. While the visible Chinese trade balance had been unfavorable for several decades, the trend became more pronounced after 1930. A number of important factors contributed to this situation. Overseas remittances by Chinese living abroad declined more than 50 percent; the devaluation of foreign currencies made it easier for foreign goods to enter China; and the large Manchurian soybean export trade was lost after 1931. To counteract these developments the Chinese Government. 1931. To counteract these developments, the Chinese Government raised import duties several times on practically all commodities between 1931 and 1934.

Another important factor influencing Chinese cotton production is found in the promotional activities of the Government. A program to improve and increase cotton production was started in 1931. In 1932, the Chinese Government set up the National Economic Council, the purpose of which was to improve economic conditions. One of the main activities of this organization was cotton improvement, which was to follow three main lines; namely, distribution of improved seed, increased credit facilities for cotton farmers, and improvement of marketing facilities. The National Cotton Control Commission was organized under the auspices of the Economic Council in October 1933 to carry on the cotton-improvement work.

The National Government established a central agricultural experiment station near Nanking in 1934, which also cooperated with the provincial experiment stations on selection and distribution of cottonseed. An American plant breeder was employed for several years to assist the Federal and provincial experiment stations in these activities.

tions in these activities.

The Government also set up testing and inspection bureaus at several of the important marketing centers. One of the main functions of these bureaus was to test cotton offered for sale in an endeavor to improve the quality of cotton marketed, by reducing adulteration and moisture content.

In November 1935 the Chinese Government abandoned the silver

In November 1935 the Chinese Government abandoned the silver monetary standard and adopted a managed-currency system. This increased the price of imported cotton and contributed to the rise in domestic farm prices. The competitive position of Chinese cotton as compared with foreign growths was improved, and an acreage expansion was thereby stimulated.

Cheaper interest rates to farmers through cooperative credit societies, sponsored directly and indirectly by the Government, assisted farmers in some localities to dig wells for irrigation and in some districts to market their cotton. The loan agencies often assisted members of the cooperative societies in selling their cotton. By eliminating several middlemen, the producer obtained a large percentage of the market value of his cotton.

The provincial governments in practically all the important cotton-producing Provinces, the municipalities of Shanghai and Tsingtao, the leading Chinese banks, and the China International Famine Relief Commission also have aided in the cotton-improvement work and acreage expansion.

ment work and acreage expansion.

Japanese influence

The Japanese have shown an interest in cotton production in China for a number of years. Of the 5,100,000 spindles in China, approximately 40 percent are owned by Japanese. The Japanese mills are especially interested in improved cotton, as they spin a high percentage of the fine-count yarn made in China and produce an important quantity of the yarn and piece goods exported. Certain Japanese leaders have proclaimed on several occasions that they were interested in securing a source of raw-cotton supply for Japan near home, the purpose of which would be to replace as much Indian and American staple as possible. For instance, a Japanese monthly publication, the Oriental Economist, of August 1935 stated: "If China can be induced to grow cotton in such volume and quality as will meet the expanding requirements of Japanese spinning and weaving mills, the benefits accruing to both nations therefrom will be manifold."

The Japanese cotton mills and the Japanese Government have also been assisting in Chinese cotton-improvement work, particularly in Shantung and Hopei Provinces and Manchuria.

larly in Shantung and Hopei Provinces and Manchuria.

In Shantung Province the Japanese cotton mills (there are nine Ingrapes and Manchuria) in Shantung Province the Japanese cotton mills (there are nine Ingrapes mills at Tsingtao) organized the Shantung Cotton Improvement Association. For 4 years this association has been distributing American acclimatized cottonseed from Chosen, known as the King variety, to cotton farmers in eastern Shantung. In 1936 it was reported that 133,000 pounds of cottonseed were imported at Tsingtao.

Japanese industrial and agricultural experts have visited Hopel Province in North China several times in recent years. The South Province in North China several times in recent years. The South Manchurian Railway (Japanese-owned) now maintains a large office in Tlentsin employing many statisticians and research workers engaged in studying general economic conditions, including the cotton-growing industry. Japanese interests have, during the past 2 years, acquired possession of several cotton mills in Tlentsin. The Japanese have taken an active part in the work at the agricultural-experiment station owned by the Peiping-Mukden Railway located about 20 miles northeast of Peiping. This station, consisting of about 50 acres, has been managed since 1934 by a trained Japanese agricultural expert and has been stressing cotton acclimatization and growing seed for distribution. One of the principal types of cotton grown at this station is from American seed that has been acclimatized in Chosen. It is reported that the railway and Japanese interests each pay half of the operating expenses of the experiment station. How much of the improved seed has been distributed is not known, but American-type cotton can now be seen growing along the railways in several districts where native types were formerly raised.

types were formerly raised.

In Manchuria the Japanese Army and the cotton-textile industry of Japan began an energetic cotton-improvement program in 1933. The Manchurian Cotton Producing Association was organized for the purpose of increasing cotton production from about 50,000 bales the purpose of increasing cotton production from about 50,000 bales in 1933 to 400,000 in 1948. New cotton-experiment stations were established, farmers were furnished seed, and marketing organizations were set up. Because of unfavorable weather conditions in 1934 and 1935 there were only slight increases in production. This confirmed the general opinion that climatic conditions in Manchuria are unfavorable for cotton production. As a result, the Japanese cotton industry lost interest, but the Army has continued the program on a reduced basis and, after further experimentation, expects to develop cotton varieties more suitable to the Manchurian expects to develop cotton varieties more suitable to the Manchurian climate. An early estimate of the 1937 crop placed the production in Manchuria at 91,000 bales, but this figure will undoubtedly be revised downward because of heavy rains in the late summer.

POSSIBILITIES FOR FUTURE PRODUCTION

It has been pointed out that in the last few years China has It has been pointed out that in the last few years China has reached a point of practical self-sufficiency in cotton production and thereby replaced over a million bales annually of American and Indian cotton formerly imported. This increase has been the result of a number of developments, including the imposition of import duties on raw cotton and cotton textiles, favorable cotton prices in relation to other crops, improved transportation facilities, and the crop-improvement program.

So far, the increase in production has resulted in practically eliminating foreign cotton from the Chinese market. In view of the growing desire of Japanese interests to obtain cotton from nearby sources, it is of particular interest to determine whether or not Chinese cotton production can be expanded further and not Chinese cotton production can be expanded further and thereby replace American and other growths in the other markets of the Orient.

Under certain conditions, such an expansion in Chinese production appears possible. Import duties imposed by the Chinese Government will not, of course, encourage production beyond the point of domestic self-sufficiency, but the other factors that have aided in bringing about the recent increase in production may be effective in expanding the production of cotton for export.

The competition for land that exists between cotton and other crops is particularly severe in China. Even where the price of cotton is favorable, a farmer may not grow it, because he is interested first of all in assuring a sufficient supply of food. This is particularly true in regions where transportation facilities are ⁶Since the beginning of Sino-Japanese hostilities in August 1937 several hundred thousand spindles at Shanghai and Tsingtao have been destroyed or damaged.

[†] From a report of the American Consulate General, Tientsin, September 2, 1936.

inadequate. It is probable that an improvement in transportation facilities will be made. This may make it possible to bring foodstuffs into North China from the surplus-food-producing regions of Manchuria and certain sections of north China and result in a further expansion of cotton acreage.

further expansion of cotton acreage.

In addition to helping solve the question of food supply, improved transportation would in many places also reduce cotton-marketing costs. In many of the cotton-producing sections, the crop passes through the hands of a number of middlemen, each of whom moves the cotton along another stage to market. Better transportation and the resulting reduction in the number of middlemen would result in lower costs of raw cotton to the mills and possibly higher prices to the farmers.

On the other hand, improvement in the economic status of the Chinese farmer resulting from better transportation facilities might effect some increase in the domestic consumption of raw cotton, thereby reducing supplies available for export. Furthermore, should increased industrialization be developed in north China, a larger volume of cotton would likely be required for local consumption. There are still certain areas in China where new land might be brought into use for the production of cotton. Some of these are brought into use for the production of cotton. Some of these are located along the seacoast of Hopei Province and in the coastal region north of Shanghai. The reclaiming of this land, which will require a large amount of capital, would necessarily devolve upon the Government, and such a project is not likely to be undertaken for some time. for some time.

for some time.

Even more uncertain are the possibilities of bringing new land into cultivation in northwestern China. Large areas of land are available in that part of the country, where the rainfall is extremely light and the growing season shorter than that of Hopei Province. Expansion of the crop acreage in this region would be dependent upon irrigation, for which water supplies are rather limited.

Some increase in the crop acreage in the Yangtze Valley might be made through large-scale drainage operations. Here again, however, it would be a question of a Government undertaking. Furthermore, in most sections of the Yangtze cotton region, rice is generally a more profitable crop than cotton, and it is not probable generally a more profitable crop than cotton, and it is not probable that more than a small part of any new land brought into cultivation would be devoted to cotton.

A continuation of the cotton-improvement work appears likely, once the current conflict in China is ended. The program has been primarily effective in improving the quality of the crop, but in the long run it should result in higher average yields. Production of higher-quality cotton would, of course, make the Chinese crop more competitive in the export market.

At the present stage of developments, Chinese cotton is more suitable for replacing Indian cotton than American. Little information is available with respect to the comparative advantages of cotton production in India and China. On the basis of general forming practices however, and the much higher ridge proof cotton production in India and China. On the basis of general farming practices, however, and the much higher yields per acre in China, cotton production there is considered more efficient. In conclusion, it is believed that, if an energetic program for expanding the acreage and improving the quality of the crop is continued, especially in north China, cotton production will exceed Chinese requirements. This cotton would be sold in other oriental markets, supplanting a certain amount of American cotton but offering stronger competition to Indian cotton. Uncertain rainfall in north China, however, will no doubt result in an irregular supply from year to year.

One of the most important questions in respect to future Chinese cotton production is the extension of Japanese influence in China. The purchase of Chinese cotton with Japanese currency not only would ease the Japanese foreign-exchange situation but would create a larger market for Japanese goods in China. As such developments occur, they may be expected to result in the utilization by the Japanese cotton industry of larger amounts of Chinese cotton, which would replace other foreign growths.

As long as military activity continues, however, cotton production will be materially reduced. Some Chinese cotton will probably be exported to Japan, because of the large number of cotton mills that have been closed in China.

The history of cotton cultivation in north China goes back to The history of cotton cultivation in north China goes back to remote ages, beginning almost contemporaneously with the introduction of Buddhism into China. This crop was first raised as an agricultural product about 1,000 years ago, but its propagation and encouragement among the masses did not take place until rather recently. To be more exact, it was not until 1919 when cotton cultivation received a strong impetus from the spinning industry which recorded a sudden spurt about that year and continued to encourage cultivation. In consequence land used for the raising of cotton has increased in area considerably.

According to the 1937 statistics the area of land used for cotton cultivation in China totaled 3,500,000 hectares and production of raw cotton amounted to 14,000,000 tan (1 tan equals 60 kilo-the main producing centers of north China, whose average annual production is about 3,770,000 tan or 36 percent of China's total. The area of land under cultivation and the cotton production of these three provinces for the past 5 years ending in 1936 are given in the table below.

ADVANTAGES OF COTTON CULTIVATION IN NORTH CHINA

Unlike the highly mechanized and industrialized cotton cultivation in the United States, cotton growers in North China are farmers of an extremely low standard, striving for the best to get a meager livelihood. These people barely meet their fundamental needs, such as food, clothing, and shelter through their main agricultural pursuits, and anything more that they want they must get through raising cotton, wheat, and other commercial products. Since cotton cultivation yields the largest income among farm products, it is quite indispensable in the rural regions of north China, and is consequently regarded as one of the big five crops, namely, maize, kaoliang, millet, and wheat. The importance which cotton cultivation holds in agricultural economy is very great, as it can be seen from the following table, and, in fact, forms the basis of agriculture in this region. Unlike the highly mechanized and industrialized cotton cultiva-

Moreover, the cotton yield of Hopei and Shantung is 26 chin (1 chin equals 0.60 kilograms) from 1 mu of land, which is a little better than the 22-chin-per-mu average for China as a whole, indicating that this part of the country is more favorably suited for raising this particular crop.

NATURAL CONDITIONS FOR COTTON CULTIVATION IN NORTH CHINA

Since cotton is a native plant of tropical countries, it demands since cotton is a native plant of tropleal countries, it demands more sunshine and higher temperature than other crops. The location of the cotton-raising regions of North China is 37 degrees north latitude, or slightly to the north of the average location of the world's principal centers which is generally regarded as 35 degrees north latitude. This places north China on a climatic and geographic disadvantage, and consequently the cultivation of the higher-grade varieties of cotton is limited. Varieties like the Egyptian cotton, which require a much longer time to attain growth, a warmer climate, and much humidity, cannot be raised in this region. Therefore, the selection of the best type for cultivation is very essential, since there are species like the American upland cotton which does quite well under dry climate and irregular rainfall and ripens within a relatively short time. Regardless of the poor climatic conditions (in comparison to the best producing centers of the world) north China is by far the best suited than Japan, Chosen, or Manchuria.

Period of maturity: In north China seeds can be sowed in the middle of April and harvested in early November or a period of two-hundred-odd days. This period is somewhat longer than that of Manchuria or Chosen, but a month shorter than the American cotton belts. In short, the period of growth is satisfactory.

two-hundred-odd days. This period is somewhat longer than that of Manchuria or Chosen, but a month shorter than the American cotton belts. In short, the period of growth is satisfactory.

Temperature: The temperature of the cotton-growing season, namely, for the 6 months between May and October is nearer to the ideal. The weather for June, July, and August is especially good, the highest temperature for this period being 30° Centigrade, and seldom below 20° Centigrade at the lowest. Unlike Chosen and Manchuria the thermometer rarely registers below 10° Centigrade in May, thus facilitating germination considerably.

Rainfall: Rainfall in north China is about 600 millimeters on the average which is approximately equal to that of Manchuria but half of that of Japan. Subtracting the rainfall of the rainy months, July and August, which is between 300 to 400 millimeters, the year's average, according to months is exceedingly low. In a word, rainfall of north China is relatively small and distribution very irregular. Crops must face a dry season from the very beginning to the time they attain full growth, then during their fertilization period or in July and August rainfall is so heavy and thunder so frequent that a poor yield results. However, the rainy season ceases with the passing of these 2 months and with the coming of September and October dry climate sets in again to promote ripening and harvest.

Sunshine: To make up for the low rainfall north China enjoys much sunshine. Being a wet month, the month of August is an exception to this rule, but the average number of sunny hours for the 6 months is approximately 250 hours per month, which is about the same with Manchuria. Both have plenty of sunshine.

Varieties of cotton cultivated: Native cotton and the American upland cotton which has been imported from America are the main varieties under cultivation in north China. Special characteristics of the former are its short but strong fibers and high ginning percentage. It is best suited for making threads below No. 20 size, for thick-thread spinning, for making cotton for stuffing, and for making woolen and cotton mixtures.

King and Tries varieties are the primary upland cottons which are grown. These varieties ripen very early, their fibers are longer than the native variety, and are used mainly to produce threads of the No. 30 or 40 sizes. For these reasons these two varieties have become very popular, and their cultivation has increased tremendously in recent years. It is predicted that they will hold a more prominent position than the native variety in the near future. It is interesting to note here that the significance of upland cotton was first recognized with the earnest encouragement by the Japanese in Shantung and central Hopei Provinces from about the year 1917. year 1917.

THE COTTON POLICY AND ENCOURAGEMENT AND EXPERIMENTAL FACILITIES

Policy of increasing production: The question of increasing cotton production in north China has long been a matter of deep concern on the part of the proper authorities. Deliberations on the question on the part of the proper authorities. Deliberations on the question have been going on for some time between the provisional government of Peking and the Japanese, both of whom are represented in the Japan-China Economic Council, but of late cotton has been recognized "as a profitable agricultural product for native farmers and an important raw material for Japan." In line with this conclusion a policy for increasing production was adopted, execution of which will begin with the present year. The main points embodied in this plan are as follows: plan are as follows:

1. In north China a plan calling for increasing cotton production to 10,000,000 tan per annum at the end of a period of 9 years beginning with 1938 will be carried out.

2. The area of land allotted for cotton cultivation will be increased to 30,000,000 mu. Much care will be taken to prevent the decrease which might occur in the cultivation of wheat and other grains in enlarging the area for cotton cultivation.

King's Improved and Tries will be selected for encouragement together with superior native varieties.
 Parts of the plan to be carried out each year are given in the table below.

Projected cotton production for each year

The following are the points which will be carried out in the fulfillment of the policy.

1. To increase and encourage the cultivation of superior va-

2. To advance loans for the establishment of irrigation facilities.

S. Establishment of publicity and encouragement organs.
 Strengthening of the supervisory system.
 Improvement of farming methods and the eradication of pests and plant disease

6. Readjustment of land leases for small tenant farming, improvement of transportation facilities, rationalization of transportation rates, readjustment of the customs, encouragement of immigration, and the encouragement for increasing the production of foodstuffs.

The total estimated expenditure needed to carry out the nine-year plan is approximately 29,128,000 yuan, while the establish-ment of irrigation facilities will require an additional 72,362,000 yuan which will bring the total well up to the 100,000,000-yuan mark.

Upon realization of the plan and cotton production subsequently boosted to 10,000,000 tan per annum, this amount will be apportioned as follows

Three and one-half million tan to be consumed by the spinning industry of north of north China which will have by then a total of

Other local consumption-1,000,000 tan

Upon the revival of the spinning industry, Central China is expected to demand 2,500,000 tan, leaving 3,000,000 tan available for exporting to Japan.

Encouragement and experimental facilities: With the unrestriced support of the Japanese authorities, the Provisional Government of Peking is working assiduously to complete its organization for the encouragement of the cotton industry, and other organs connected with the cotton policy. The various organizations are outlined briefly below.

1. North China Cotton Industry Association: The membership of this organization is composed of prominent Hopei, Shantung, and Shanhsi men in the cotton industry and reorganized groups of this organization is composed of prominent Hopel, Shantung, and Shanhsi men in the cotton industry and reorganized groups of provincial cotton-encouragement organs, and has its head-quarters in Peking. For some time in the past the provisional government has given assistance in the promotion of enterprises, financing and supervision in Shantung, Hopei, and Shanhsi Provinces. This organization is semiofficial in nature and is a jurificial preson of the Chinese Republic. Its capital is subscribed ical person of the Chinese Republic. Its capital is subscribed jointly by the Government and by the Japan-China Spinners' Association. It has invited Japanese experts to supervise cultivation, improve quality, and to increase output. Through the Rural Agricultural Associations it distributes seeds of improved varieties supervises cultivation, and makes advances to those in varieties, supervises cultivation, and makes advances to those in need of funds.

2. North China Cotton Co.: This organization was formed at Tientsin last spring as a cotton-purchasing firm under the joint auspices of the Japan-China Spinners' Association and the Cotton auspices of the Japan-China Spinners' Association and the Cotton Industry Association. At present it owns three press factories and engages in the distribution of seeds and the financing of rural cotton-raising communities, but since its small capital of 3,000,000 yuan tends to limit its sphere of activities preparations to increase it to 40,000,000 to 60,000,000 yuan are now under way.

Agricultural experiment stations in North China: The experiment stations dealing with cotton and other agricultural products that have existed from the China inclinate days are listed in the that have existed from pre-China incident days are listed in the following paragraphs.

1. Tsung-hsien Cotton Experiment Station: This experiment station is located to the east of Peking and was founded by Yin Tung, chief of the former Pei-Ning Railway Bureau, who with the assistance of the Japanese (especially Dr. Yoshida) created the experiment station under the management of the railway in 1934. The services of a Manchurian expert (Mr. Iwasaki) were acquired from the S. M. R. which has operated a long string of experiment and encouragement institutions. This expert selected the most suitable site for the purpose and with the completion of the buildings, the station was ready for real work in 1935.

Since the foundation of the station up to the outbreak of the China incident a total of six Japanese instructors and experts have been dispatched but two out of this group gave their lives to their cause, the weather conditions being disagreeable. Thanks to the untiring services of the other four pioneers of peaceful industrial development and to the generous efforts of Chinese assistants good progress was made, but unfortunately a brutal fate had to befall upon all of them in the form of bloody Tsungchow massacre carried out by the Chinese soldiers. The loss of these men is a grievious matter for the Chinese themselves.

Since then more earnest assistance has been given by Japan and Since then more earnest assistance has been given by Japan and 14 Japanese experts (S. M. R. men) detailed to the station in November 1937, have carried on the work, while buildings and lands have been readjusted and a new entomology section created. Twenty-one Chinese who are cooperating heartily in the work have been added to the staff.

Today this station is carrying on experiments to produce highgrade seeds and to improve cultivation methods, while fertilizers and irrigation matters are also receiving due attention. In addition wheat, kenaff, and other grains are being studied, and the eradication as well as the prevention of insect pests are occupying much of the experimenters' time. The benefits which the general farmers of north China will shortly receive from the enthusiastic work of the station will be great indeed.

2. Peking Municipal Agricultural Experiment Station: 64 chobu of land (1 chobu is equal to 2.45 acres or 99.17 ares). Director, mayor of Peking; 6 sections.

3. First provincial agricultural experiment station of Hopei at Tientsin: Yearly expenditure, 4,000 to 6,000 yuan; 10 persons on staff. 4. Hantan second station: Yearly expenditure, 4,000 to 5,000 yuan; personnel, 8.

5. Tsohochen Third Station: Personnel, 8; yearly expenditure, 4,000 to 5,000 yuan.

6. Titan Fourth Station: Annual expenditure, 3,000 yuan; personnel. 6.

7. Linfen Cotton Experiment Station: Unknown.

8. Linching Cotton Experiment Station: Unknown.

9. Chengting National Cotton Experiment Station: Unknown.

10. Tsitung National Cotton Experiment Station: Unknown. 11. Tsinan Agricultural Experiment Station: Unknown conditions but with the coming of the Japanese anything that can still be used is being put in order. Before long the former stations will be in working order again.

12. Ting-hsien Experiment Station for Public Enlightenment. With the outbreak of hostilities the responsible persons of these with the outbreak or nostilities the responsible persons of these experiment stations fled into safer regions carrying with them all valuable material and documents. Then came the anti-Japanese elements who utilized these stations for military purposes and left only the wrecks as reminders of what had existed before. No information regarding these stations was available under such conditions but with the coming of the Japanese anything that can still be used is being put in order. Before long the former statill be used is being put in order.

The above-related policy of the Government to increase cotton production is presently marking time, awaiting the full adjustment of the encouragement organs and institutions but upon their completion the plan will be pushed enthusiastically to the limit. From the very beginning the Japanese Nation has given substantial assistance toward the materialization of the plan. The Ministry of Overseas Affairs purchased in the spring of this year 1,000,000 chin (a load for 68 freight cars) of improved Chosen upland cotton seeds and through the provisional government distributed them free of charge to north China farmers. In addition, experts and instructors have been sent to north China and Chinese employees are being given training in the field. In truth the Japanese are are being given training in the field. In truth the Japanese are giving all the assistance and help that they can give. On the other hand the Peking Provisional Government is doing its part, if not more. Fully realizing the importance of cotton, it is contemplating the creation of a central organ to deal with everything that has to do with cotton, and to entrust to this organ the work of promoting and encouraging cultivation, experimenting, and the purchasing of produced cotton. Of course, separate organs will take care of the functions just listed, but they will be incorporated in the central organ. All these activities will help to bring about the speedy realization of the large-scale cotton production program which all circles concerned have placed much interest and expectation. S. OKADA.

NOVEMBER 1938.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senator if he will expand the argument will contend that we do have interests aside from trade relations in China. First we have the open-door policy under which we have moral as well as material interests in China. We have property rights there, we have schools, hospitals, eleemosynary institutions, and have treaties with China under the terms of which through reciprocity we have interests there as well as China having trade relations with the United States.

Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator, if he has not already done so, could very properly expand to show that we do have interests in China, spiritual interests, moral interests, educational interests, property interests, all of which Japan is attempting to destroy, and to assert, as the Senator has contended, that dictatorial, autocratic control over the entire territory and domain of China.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I may say to the Senator from Utah that I did develop that from all except one point of view, and that is actual investments in China.

I leave that out deliberately—perhaps not properly. The Senator knows that any time we talk about investments in foreign countries somebody makes a speech saying that we do not want to do anything to protect the Standard Oil Co. in China. We were not even very much cutraged about the Panay incident because of the fact that there were some Standard Oil tankers about. I wish to eliminate that part of the argument entirely; and in a desire to eliminate it I have omitted it from my discussion on this question.

However, on the question of future possibilities, and what we may lose as a result, assuming that Japan succeeds in conquering China, I wish to read from two articles. The first is a speech delivered in Washington at the Mayflower Hotel by Mr. C. H. French, of Shanghai, who was vice president of the Chinese-American Foreign Trade Council, based upon knowledge acquired through years of business connections in the Orient. He said:

The potentialities of China are so great as to justify the prediction that, if permitted to retain her sovereignty as contemplated by the nine-power treaty she will within the next generation eclipse every other nation in the world as a market for United States products, * * * and a steady export trade to the value of $750,000,000 per annum, to say nothing of the enormous quantities of capital goods which will be required of us in the meantime while the intensive construction program is in process. Our greatest all-time customer in the past has been the United greatest all-time customer in the past has been the United Kingdom, where we now have a well-established market in excess greatest all-time customer in the past has been the United Kingdom, where we now have a well-established market in excess of $500,000,000 a year. America stands ready to fight, if necessary, to protect that trade with Great Britain. Does not every consideration of self-interest demand that we protect our trade with a country which, if permitted to retain its sovereignty, is destined to become our greatest all-time customer of the future?

Her area is greater than that of the United States; her population is in excess of 450,000,000; her natural resources are enormous; her projected industrialization as planned by her Government is on a scale comparable to that which has characterized the development of our own country west of the Mississippi since the completion of our first railway to the Pacific.

The Government of China is now headed by a group of able Chinese who are sincerely devoted to the task of securing for their country a worthy and honorable position in the family of nations. In this connection it is pertinent to call attention to the appeal formulated by the Japanese Chamber of Commerce at Shanghai early in 1937 beseeching their Government and the Japanese people to change their attitude of hostility toward China for one of peaceful cooperation in recognition of the tremendous progress made by the Chinese in political unity, financial rehabilitation, and economic advancement.

ARTICLE BY ARNOLD

In addition, Mr. President, I wish to read briefly from an article written by Julean Arnold, for many years a commercial attaché in the Far East-a man who has had probably as frequent contacts with problems of a commercial nature as any man in the United States. I call the attention of the Senate to some of the facts pointed out by Mr. Arnold.

So far as railroads are concerned, he points out that China has only 10,000 miles of railroad, as compared with our 250,000 miles. She needs within the next 10 years, if the war should be ended, 50,000 miles. For each thousand miles of railroad she would need $50,000,000 worth of equipment. She would need the facilities of our railroad organization. The construction of 50,000 miles of railroad would mean the use of 100,000,000 wooden ties. We in the Pacific Northwest, with our lumber industry, should at least be interested in the possibility of that sort of an outlet for our products.

During the past decade China has constructed 60,000 miles of highways. Prior to that time she had no roads usable for automobiles. She now has about 75,000 motorcars, of which 80 percent are constructed in the United States. If she could be permitted unmolested, under her new leadership, to develop herself economically, the automobile industry of this country would receive the benefit.

She has installed a network of air lines, making it possible to cover important cities. In 1936 they carried 27,000 passengers. She needs further air lines and further air equipment, which would come very largely from the United States.

During the past 10 years more cities and towns were reconstructed in China than in any other country in the world for a similar period.

Nanking, China's new capital, exhibited a most active building program and was destined, except for the war, to become one of the world's most beautiful capitals. The population of Nanking increased from 350,000 in 1925 to 1,100,000 in 1937. The material for the further development of that city would come from the United States. Mr. Arnold says:

A China free to work out her own destiny would undoubtedly offer opportunities which, within a decade or two, would surpass those of Japan and most other countries, giving us an export trade with China probably tenfold that of the year 1936.

Thus at the beginning of 1937, America was just at the threshold of realizing in a big way on the potentialities in China's vast modernization program.

What country is better prepared financially to step in and realize upon China's potentialities than America? Shall we make credit advances to China for constructive developments and thereby conserve our future on the Pacific, or shall we make these funds available to Japan to further the ambitions of her military overlords and thereby jeopardize our entire future on the Pacific?

I now ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the article by Julean Arnold be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHINA'S FAITH AND AMERICA'S FUTURE (By Julean Arnold)

Americans are mainly interested in the present struggle in Asia because of its possible effects upon them. Japan's invasion of China is the most appalling tragedy in all of human history, because it was launched at a time when that most populous of nations was at the very threshold of a huge constructive modernization program. When one of our outstanding American journalists tells his radio audience, as one recently did, that China has made no progress during the past 20 years, it is time that someone who knows better stepped forward and gave the facts. After serving my country for 37 years in China and Japan, I have had an opportunity to see, hear, and learn much. I shall now attempt to present frankly my views upon the situation, as I believe it affects our people and our country. I am presumptuous enough to hold the opinion that in any presentation of statistics regarding trade and economic conditions in China and Japan, one would be stupid indeed were he not to use great care intelligently to interpret them for otherwise they might be very misleading. Americans are mainly interested in the present struggle in Asia misleading.

WHAT WERE THE CONDITIONS IN CHINA BEFORE THE JAPANESE INVASION?

"The National Government in China is now completely secure with capable hands in control of the nation's finance and economy."

"China's financial structure has become firmly laid as has been proved by the considerable improvement in her international payments.

A British journalist in Shanghai some years ago accused me of being an incurable optimist regarding China. Had the above statements been imputed to me, they might have elicited no statements been imputed to me, they might have elicited no surprise. Certainly very few people would have expected sentiments of this sort from a Japanese. They are, nevertheless, taken from a report of Mr. Seiji Yoshida, chairman of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce and Industry in Shanghai and manager of the Mitsubishi Bank in Shanghai. The report as broadcasted through the press of the Far East emanated from Tokyo under date of Moreh 1 1027. This power item further extens. date of March 1, 1937. This news item further states:

"Pointing out the strengthening of the Chinese Government,
Mr. Yoshida believes the present is an opportune moment for the Japanese Government and people to rectify their erroneous China policy as hitherto employed;" and "Regarding the much-talked-of economic cooperation between the two countries as is being followed by Japan, Mr. Yoshida said that this would be possible only as long as China remains a semi-feudal, semicolonial state, but China's political and economic progress in recent years has been rapid, and the Chinese people have been earnest in working out their destiny."

This news item makes no mention of any comments by Mr. Yoshida on communism in China, undoubtedly for the reason that he realized, as did all unbiased observers, that communism in China had by 1937 just about spent its force and was no longer a matter of serious concern to those interested in China's moderni-

WHAT WERE AMERICA'S PROSPECTS IN CHINA BEFORE THE JAPANESE INVASION?

No other country on the face of the earth had made such phenomenal strides in modernization as had China during the past 10 years. These presaged big potentialities in the trade of the future. years. These presaged hig potentialities in the trade of the future. They spelled a transition in imports from consumer to capital goods. They indicated manyfold increases in the country's imports. Those with vision appreciated their significance in its extensive ramifications. Mr. Yoshida and his colleagues sensed this when they made their report. They appreciated the potentialities in trade which a self-rejuvenated China could offer. Now, what about the possibilities of realizing on those potentialities? To be specific, let us consider this subject under definite concrete subtopics:

Railroads: China has but 10,000 miles, compared with America's

Railroads: China has but 10,000 miles, compared with America's

During the past few years China rehabilitated existing lines and was engaged in construction of several thousand miles of new rail-

China is the only country still needing as much as 50,000 miles. For each 1,000 miles of railroads, $50,000,000 worth of equipment is needed.

The country has the experienced railroad engineers and operators necessary for handling its railroad problems.

Chinese bankers were participating in financing railroad construction.

Great Britain, France, Germany, and Belgium eagerly signed loan agreements for the construction of new lines under Chinese auspices, stipulating that materials must be purchased from their respective nationals

Export-Import Bank, Washington, was prepared to negotiate credits for the several hundred million dollars for American materials, bringing big trade opportunities to American manufacturers

Sales of railroad equipment to China represent mainly manufactured goods and no war materials. The construction of 50,000 miles of railroads means the use of 100,000,000 wooden ties. This prospect is of special interest to our Northwest lumber interests.

Highways: During the past decade China constructed 60,000 miles of highways, mostly in sections of the country which previously had had no roads.

About 80 percent of the 75,000 motor cars in China are American.

Further plans embraced several hundred thousand miles with provision for coordination with rallroads and waterways.

A prospering China will need millions of motor vehicles for the highways necessary to her economic transportation.

Waterways: The improvement of China's waterways was well advanced by 1937.

Existing steamship lines were reorganized and improved. Schools were established in China for training personnel for the China had purchased new steamers from England. She was pre-paring to negotiate for the purchase of American ships. Airways: China had installed a network of air lines, making it possible to cover all important cities by regular schedules. In 1936 they carried 27,000 passengers.

A Chinese-American company occupied an important place in commercial aviation, operating about 3,000 miles of lines on a profitable basis and was prepared to extend its operations and equipment several fold.

American equipment and personnel were outstanding factors in China completed airway connections with America, England, and France.

Telegraphs, telephones, and radios: Wireless-telegraph stations were installed in the principal cities.

Radio telephone communications were opened with America May

A network of long-distance telephones was completed connecting important cities, although the total number of telephones was only 250,000.

Largest telephone company in China is an American concern in Shanghai.

Radio broadcasting stations were installed in important cities. America occupied first place in the supply of radio equipment.

Industrial developments: China made greater progress in the in-stallation of modern industrial plants during 1936-37 than at any other time in her history.

Among the larger industries were: Cotton spindles, 5,000,000; looms 50.000; flour mills, yearly capacity, 25,000,000 barrels; cigarette factories, yearly capacity, 80,000,000,000. The largest electric-power plant, with 300,000-kilowatt capacity, is American owned.

The imports of industrial machinery and equipment presented prospects for ever-increasing sales of American-manufactured goods and promised steadily rising economic levels among the masses in China, hence increased purchasing power.

Building construction: During the past 10 years more cities and towns were reconstructed in China than in any other country in the world for a similar period.

With the beginning of 1937, China embarked upon a modern building program, offering well-grounded hopes for big sales of American building materials, heating, lighting, ventilating, and air-conditioning equipment.

Improvements among rural masses during the years 1932-37 a striking factor in effectively combating communistic activities.

The installation of credit cooperatives, giving farmers money at 8 percent annually instead of the former 2 and 3 percent a month, was of outstanding significance.

Better conditions among the masses were reflected in steadily increased purchasing power.

Financial betterments: With the beginning of 1937 China was definitely headed for currency stabilization, uniform currency definitely headed for currency stabilization, uniform currency throughout the country, and adequate provision for refunding her outstanding foreign and domestic loans.

Improved national credits were evidenced by the resumption of foreign loans and credits by foreign countries, especially in long-term credits to government organs for constructive projects.

The American silver policy which forced China onto a managed-currency basis with notes of the Government banks as legal tender proved helpful to China's financial reorganization. If represents the most helpful contribution to the country in its present crisis as it enabled China to establish substantial credits abroad through her nationalization and exports of silver. her nationalization and exports of silver.

Political conditions: Following the revolution of 1911 China suffered serious internal disruptions for two decades, but by 1930 conditions began definitely to improve and by 1937 national unification became a reality.

The restoration of confidence in the central government was evidenced by the increasing support of the country's bankers in constructive development projects.

Foreign trade: Had China been privileged to execute her modernization program upon which she was so well embarked in 1937, she would have startled the world by the huge volumes of foreign trade which would have followed in its wake. It portended a vastly greater emphasis upon capital goods, which were destined for constructive purposes.

Salient facts in America's trade with China: During the 5 years preceding 1937, America led in both China's exports and imports, taking about 30 percent of the former and selling about 20 percent

The aggregate of American investments in China are about $250,000,000, including about $50,000,000 in missionary and other eleemosynary institutions.

American trans-Pacific steamship companies early in 1937 reported the most encouraging outlook for years, especially in the American tourist trade.

In 1937 there were about 12,000 Americans resident in China, including about 4,000 resident in Shanghai.

American business houses, American schools, American mission-aries, and other American institutions and organizations all contribute toward the popularizing of American goods, American methods, and American ideas, among the Chinese people.

American motion-picture films have been an important factor in opularizing things American. About 80 percent of the imported films are American.

With the severance of Manchuria from China, our import and export returns with China were considerably reduced.

Our 400 American concerns in China were unanimous in early 1937 in proclaiming that the country presented the most hopeful outlook ever offered, with prospects for a record year and still better opportunities for succeeding years.

A China free to work out her own destiny would undoubtedly offer opportunities which, within a decade or two, would surpass those of Japan and most other countries, giving us an export trade with China probably tenfold that of the year 1936.

old of realizing in a big way on the potentialities in China's vast modernization program.

What country is better prepared financially to step in and realize upon China's potentialities than America? Shall we make credit advances to China for constructive developments and thereby conserve our future on the Pacific, or shall we make these funds available to Japan to further the ambitions of her military overlords and thereby jeopardize our entire future on the Pacific?

WHAT WERE JAPAN'S PROSPECTS IN HER TRADE WITH CHINA BEFORE THE HOSTILITIES?

Mr. Yoshida is quoted as stating in his report as mentioned

Mr. Yoshida is quoted as stating in his report as mentioned above:

"While other foreign powers are trying to create new opportunities to meet the new situation in China, Japan has remained inactive. Japan must henceforth discard her vigorous China policy and adopt one that is morally acceptable to the Chinese Government and is practical. It is absurd that Japan has always charged China with insincerity or befriending other foreign powers to antagonize Japan, for which Japanese diplomatic and other Government authorities must be held partially responsible."

During the years immediately preceding the Japanese invasion, Japan's trade with China was on the increase, even discounting the smuggling trade in north China which did not enter into the returns of the Chinese customs. Had Japan followed the advice of her chamber of commerce at Shanghal and pursued a policy of friendly cooperation, it is patent that the Chinese were prepared to accord Japanese trading, industrial, and financial interest, opportunities equally as good as those accorded other foreign nations. For instance, the Chinese Government expressed a willingness to negotiate credit-loan agreements with the Japanese for railroad construction on terms similar to those offered other foreign nationals. However, Japan's military overlords demanded a degree of supervision over the construction and operation of these lines, which was repugnant to an independent China naturally set upon the preservation of her territorial integrity and sovereign rights.

Furthermore, it is more than probable that if Japan had been prepared to play the game on the basis of a recognition of the policy of the open door, American financiers and manufacturers would have been willing to participate with Japanese in development projects in China. In fact, Japan, with her close geographical proximity to China and her natural facilities for tapping the Chinese markets, stood to gain by everything which other foreign interests might have done toward stimulating the vast modernization program upon which China had embarked.

WHAT ARE JAPAN'S POLICIES IN THE INVASION OF CHINA?

Prince Konoye, Japanese Premier, August 28, 1937, proclaimed Japan's only course in China is to beat China to her knees so that she may no longer have the spirit to fight. Communism in China had almost spent its force, hence this could not be cited as a legit-imate pretext for the invasion.

Japan hopes:

Japan hopes:

1. By a policy of terrorism to subjugate the great masses in China, and thereby establish a Japanese feudal military overlordship on the Asiatic Continent.

2. To prevent the Chinese from developing the training or equipment for military protection, but to impress into the service of the Japanese armies as much of the Chinese manpower as can be safely and effectively used under Japanese military direction.

3. To set up on the Asiatic Continent a grandiose Japanese military machine in preparation for further conquests in the Pacific and eventually to achieve Japan's so-called manifest destiny to rule the world.

and eventually to achieve Japan's so-called manifest destiny to rule the world.

4. To secure monopolistic control of China's economic resources, thereby freeing Japan from reliance on America for cotton, to-bacco, iron and steel, heavy chemicals, and certain other essential products. In North China the Japanese are trying to force Chinese farmers to grow American-type cotton even at the expense of cereal production, to guarantee to Japanese mills the needed cotton at prices probably less than half the production costs of cotton in America.

5. To control and direct all modern industrial developments in China, utilizing the greatest mannower in the world on a mere

5. To control and direct all modern industrial developments in China, utilizing the greatest manpower in the world on a mere subsistence-wage basis, thereby making possible the flooding of the markets of the world with cheap Japanese-manufactured products.

6. To create in China a monopolistic market for Japanese-manufactured products through a control of all means of communications and through preferential tariffs and marketing facilities.

7. To set up Japanese-controlled regional puppet governments vested with responsibility, but with little or no authority, and answerable to their Japanese military overlords.

8. To eradicate from the Asiatic Continent American and other westernizing influences, substituting the Japanese language for English, and putting into the schools textbooks written in Japan.

9. Under the fiction of relinquishing special Japanese concessions and extraterritoriality, to induce other nations to do likewise and in reality develop China as one huge Japanese concession with Japanese nationals enjoying preferential considerations.

Hundreds of colleges, schools, and hospitals, thousands of industrial plants and business establishments, as well as tens of thousands of houses, have been destroyed or occupied by Japanese. Hundreds of industrial plants, business establishments, and private houses have been appropriated without compensation. Scores of cities and towns have been looted and hundreds of tons of art treasures shipped to Japan.

In areas occupied by Japanese the Chinese customs revenues are being held by Japanese, and none are released for foreign commitments against revenues. China's financial reforms, which were nearing perfection before the invasion, are now threatened with chaos.

Occupied areas are scoured for metal coins, hence are depleted

Military notes, irredeemable and inconvertible, in denominations as low as 1 cent, the equivalent of about one-seventh of a cent American currency, are forced on the populace.

Opium shops and narcotic peddlers follow the Japanese armies; hence Japanese collect toll while demoralizing the population.

Wholesale disorder and brigandage are spreading over occupied areas, with general political and economic break-down.

WHAT ARE AMERICA'S PROSPECTS IN CHINA AFTER JAPAN'S INVASION?

Railroads: A Japanized China will build and operate railroads primarily to further Japan's policies of military and economic domina-tion of the Far East, using as soon as possible a maximum of Japanese equipment, even to the extent of tapping the stands of timber in Manchuria for ties or sleepers. Although we may be offered some alluring initial orders to secure our financial backing, yet as soon as Japan gets her financial wind, we shall have very soon to be content to take the crumbs that drop from the master's table and these will get drier as time goes on. Japanized railroads will be so operated as to give preferential consideration to Japanese with the so operated as to give preterioral consideration to Japanese trade and other Japanese interests.

Highways: Roads will be built as accessory to railroads and waterways and primarily for Japan's military purposes and to further her plans for tapping the economic resources of China. As for equipment, American branch plants in Japan may, for some years, be permitted to supply cars, but all accessories will be manufactured by Japanese concerns. In fact, Japan is already engaged in developing a plant in Mukden for the manufacture of manufactured by Japanese concerns. In fact, Japan is already engaged in developing a plant in Mukden for the manufacture of motor cars and trucks.

Waterways: The Japanese flag will enjoy enclusive privileges on the inland waterways and coastal trade of China, under a Japanized China. Vessels will be built in Japanese shipbuilding plants. Through the control of all internal water routes, Japan will have a stranglehold on the trade and economic developments of China. Alrways: American participation in the operation of China's commercial aviation will cease immediately under a Japanese-dominated China. Japan will dictate the terms under which we shall be permitted to operate our trans-Pacific air clippers in making connections with China, and if possible, other sections of the Far East as well. A minimum of American equipment will be purchased, the quantities decreasing as Japan is able to produce her own airplane industry.

Telegraphs, telephones, and radios: With a Japanized China, American equipment will become as rare as snow on the streets of San Francisco. Broadcasting will be censored so that China will be fed what "Master" Japan wants to give her, and send out what he wants her to say.

Industrial developments: With a Japanized China, here is where what he wants her to say.

Industrial developments: With a Japanized China, here is where America will be hoodwinked into believing that she is going to get some good business. Exacting long-term credits, Japanese will take American machinery but only to build up industries whereby they may use Chinese labor on mere subsistence wages, so as to outdo the rest of the world in production costs and then flood the world with their cheap-manufactured products. We shall then be faced with a real "yellow peril." Thus, we shall be invited to furnish capital and equipment to beln Japan undermine our wage. furnish capital and equipment to help Japan undermine our wage scales and standards of living. Furthermore, Japan will be especially concerned with building up her war industries on the Asiatic Continent, so that we shall be asked to help finance these, as we have been helping Japan to build up her war industries in Manchuria. What sort of investments will these present for American capital?

Trade and cultural stakes: Following the outbreak of hostilities, several thousands of Americans were evacuated from or had to leave the country because of the Japanese invasion. Huge quantities of American cargo destined to China had to be diverted. American properties in China have been destroyed or occupied by Japanese armed forces. In fact, foundations in trade and cultural contacts built up after decades of labor and with outlays of hundreds of millions of dollars are being destroyed by this undeclared war on China.

The $250,000,000 in American investments in China under a Japanized China will be threatened with extinction. By forcing exports and imports in China to be handled through Japanese concerns, our banks, insurance companies, steamship companies, and other servicing organizations now constituting important items in our invisible trade will leave to do what our companies in Man-our invisible trade will leave to do what our companies in Manchuria did, namely, to get out.

The losses, direct and indirect, to American interests will aggregate more than the total of our trade with Japan for some years.

America has been toboganned from first to third place in China trade, with heavy reductions in both exports and imports.

America has depended upon China for large quantities of materials which enter into her manufacturing industries, such as tung-oil for our varnish; bristles for our brushes; vegetable oils for our cooking, fats, and soaps; wool for our carpets; goatskins for women's shoes; antimony for type and babbitt metals; tungsten for high-speed machine tools and electric-light filaments; and tin for our tinned plate. We were her best customer, taking 30 percent of her exports. Japan aims to secure control of these commodities, purchase them with fiat money, force us to buy them with good American money, and pay tolls to Japanese brokerage houses, Japanese banks, Japanese insurance companies, and Japanese ships. She may even force us to take them in processed form nese ships. She may even force us to take them in processed form if she chooses.

Japan's plans for the increased production of American-type cotton and leaf tobacco in China, if successful, spell the doom of our former lucrative trade in the Far East in these commodities. Japan will be able to force the Chinese at the point of the bayonet Japan will be able to force the Chinese at the point of the bayonet to raise American-type cotton at 3 or 4 cents a pound. Recent news flashes from China inform us that the Japanese authorities plan to rush their cotton-production program by making cotton planting in North China compulsory, while attempting to prohibit the planting of cereals, counting upon Manchuria to supply the latter to North China.

Through the use of their Federal Reserve Bank of China notes, which are inconvertible and irredeemable, the Japanese are shutting out American competition in imports and experts to be proported.

Through preferential tariffs, transportation and travel facilities, and currency-exchange manipulations, Japanese traders and goods are forcing Americans and American commodities out of the are forcing Americans and American commodities out of the market. Her policies threaten the elimination of the American mercantile marine from the Pacific.

Through the control of the telegraphs, posts, and all other means of communication, Japan will set up annoying barriers against American contacts with China.

Anti-American propaganda is being broadcast in Japanese-controlled areas for the purpose of killing the effectiveness in American trade and other relations of American-educated Chinese and those friendly with our institutions goods and methods and those friendly with our institutions, goods, and methods.

The appalling destruction of property and lives has reduced the purchasing power of the population, curtailing seriously import possibilities for American goods, which in China sell on a quality basis.

By the wholesale operations in China of Japanese opium and narcotics vendors, our difficulties in shutting out narcotics from our country will be multiplied very considerably.

IS AMERICA AN ALLY OF JAPAN?

While public opinion in America sympathizes with China's cause while public opinion in America sympathizes with China's cause in the defense of her country from foreign invasion, yet as circumstances have developed, we actually find ourselves rendering far more material aid to Japan than to China. The vast bulk of our exports to Japan during these past few years have been in war materials or commodities which figure in Japan's war industries. A recent United Press news item from Tokyo informs us that 10,000 tokyo box. taxis have been taken out of service in Tokyo alone, while private owners of cars are limited to 1½ gallons of gasoline daily, so rigid are the rations of materials used for the prosecution of the war. In Japan's needs for iron, it states cast iron and rubber splash guards have been taken off automobiles, and bicycles no longer have tin license plates. Efforts are being made to substitute porce-lain for iron for mail boxes. In the same way, the Government control of textiles has reduced purchaseable linen, woolen, and cotton almost to nothing.

Some have boasted of our increased imports to Manchuria during these past 2 years, but reports from official sources from Manchuria show that nearly all of the exports are for war industries. Thus during these last few years comparatively little of our exports to Japan, which roughly total about $300,000,000 annually, are other than war materials.

If one were to follow the Japanese armies in China and witnessed all the American-mechanized equipment, he might think, except for the personnel, that he was following the American

By the purchase of Chinese commodities from Japanese concerns in the Japanese-controlled areas we are helping further to assist Japan in the purchase of war materials. She buys these products with irredeemable and inconvertible paper, or flat money, and we have to pay American money, thereby helping her to establish credits abroad.

It is estimated that there are being sent back to Japan annually by the 280,000 Japanese resident in America upward of $20,-000,000. Thus we are furnishing this Japanese population in our country with opportunities for the accumulation of surpluses from their earnings which contribute substantially to the country's war chest. On the other hand, Americans resident, or having interests in Japan or Manchuria, are forbidden by the exchange-control laws from sending any money from those territories.

Japanese are permitted to flood our country with tons of propaganda, to broadcast over our radio, and to send their spokesmen around pleading Japan's cause, while we are prevented from the around pleading Japan's cause, while we are prevented from the opportunity of presenting to the Japanese people our interpretation of our views and our interests in the China situation.

The longer we delay taking positive action to protect our interests in Asia and the Far East the more difficult will become the task, because the more deeply the Japanese penetrate China the larger the sources of supply upon which she will be able to draw for assisting her in carrying on her war.

SUGGESTED COURSES OF ACTION OPEN TO AMERICANS

Whereas Japan has violated the Nine Power Treaty and the Whereas Japan has violated the Nine Power Treaty and the Kellogg Pact, and whereas America enjoys extraterritorial rights in her treaty with China which impose on her certain responsibilities to her nationals, which she is now unable to discharge because of Japan's undeclared and unprovoked war on China, therefore it is proposed that we institute certain reprisals against Japan in our efforts to protect our rights and interests in China. Among the suggested reprisals which may well receive consideration are the following:

1. Devise some method of effectively controlling the flow of Ameri-

2. Study carefully America's needs in essential war materials in case of emergency demands, so as to safeguard our country against the depletion of stocks necessary for our own armaments.

3. Impose prohibitive import tariff duties on commodities imported primarily from Japan. In this connection an import tariff of one or two hundred percent on raw silk, which constitutes over 50 percent of our imports from Japan, may prove quite effective in case of the control of t curtailing this trade.

4. So long as Japanese military or other organizations continue to occupy American premises in China without due compensation or permission, consider some such reciprocal action as the closing down of Japanese-language schools in our country. There are 189 of these in the Hawaiian Islands.

5. In order to help Americans in their purchases of Chinese commodities in Japanese-controlled areas, require that purchases of Chinese commodities be accompanied with consular certificates showing that they were financed through American-currency trans-showing that they were financed through American-currency transactions, with no discriminations against American buyers.

6. So long as the Japanese refuse to allow the free passage of American commodities in the waterways of China and embarrass our American concerns operating in China through the imposition of disastrously discriminatory treatment, which in some cases amounts to confiscation, restrict Japanese ships in their use of American barbors.

7. So long as Americans in Japan and Manchuria are prohibited from sending money from those countries, devise some method of making it difficult to send money from America to Japan.

8. Discountenance American manufacturers and bankers extending credit accommodations to Japan while Americans are discriminated against in trading in China.

9. Insist that American manufacturers do not shift the handling of their business in China from American to Japanese houses.

10. Encourage American manufacturers and exporters to organize export syndicates effectively to prevent Japanese importers and exporters from operating under monopolistic conditions, play-and exporters from operating under monopolistic conditions, playing one concern off against another.

11. So long as Americans are not privileged to send material into Japan to enlighten the Japanese people concerning the situation in China affecting American interests, prohibit Japanese propaganda from being disseminated in the United States.

12. America and American broadcasting stations should be prohibited from receiving Japanese broadcasts while American broadcasts are not received in Japan.

casts are not received in Japan.

13. So long as Japanese in China censor American mail and other communications going into Japanese occupied areas, institute a censorship on mail and other communications coming into America from Japan and the Japanese-occupied areas in China.

14. Extend credit facilities to China for the purchase of American commodities, as one way of helping the Chinese to make their defense effective. A leave of a few hundreds of millions of others.

defense effective. A loan of a few hundreds of millions of dollars at this time would be tantamount to insurance on a Pacific peace policy. In this connection, the facilities of the Export-Import Bank should be extended to make the advancement of these credits possible.

HOW IMPORTANT ARE OUR RESPONSIBILITIES AS A PACIFIC POWER?

Much has been said in the past about an impending Pacific era. Few of our people now realize that with Japan's invasion of China, which is in fact one of the most momentous events in all of history, the Pacific era has been ushered in. It is here. Henceforth, what may transpire in this section of the world is likely to be of even greater concern to us as a nation than what may happen on the other side of the Atlantic.

America is essentially more of a Pacific than an Atlantic power. It is feasible to construct a bridge across the Behring Straits whereby it may be possible to drive our motorcars across onto the Asiatic Continent. In fact, the shortest distance from St. Louis in the Mississippi Valley to Hankow in the Yangtze Valley is along the great circle traversing the Behring Straits. Furthermore, but a greater Pacific coast line then has sure other we have a greater Pacific coast line than has any other occidental nation.

Modern means of communications have brought our Asiatic neighbors into a stone's throw of us. We can now hall them across the water. We cannot any longer build up walls of isolation shutting us away from the rest of the world. The Pacific Ocean is no longer a formidable barrier separating us from the Far East—better now called the Far West.

Many Americans with little background in things Japanese.

Far East—better now called the Far West.

Many Americans with little background in things Japanese but prominent in our business, industrial, professional, and other walks of life have visited Japan, and their Japanese hosts found it easy to fit them with Japanese glasses and ear trumpets, which enable them to see and hear the Japanese versions of Far Eastern matters. Some of these, after returning to America, continue to wear these Japanese glasses and ear trumpets, indicating quite clearly that our whole educational system is at fault in not furnishing our people with the means of a good education in the fundamentals of the civilizations and institutions of these important Asiatic peoples.

in the fundamentals of the civilizations and institutions of these important Asiatic peoples.

We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars and sent tens of thousands of our nationals to China and Japan in efforts to carry American ideals and ideas to the Far East. Millions of Chinese and Japaneses speak, read, and write English and understand us and our institutions. How many Americans are there who possess a substantial knowledge of China and Japan and understand the psychology of the Chinese and Japanese?

Japan moved into Manchuria, a territory larger than Germany and France combined, and now threatens to occupy an area greater than the United States with a population nearly three times larger, yet we show more concern over the taking of a few hundred square miles in Europe by a European power than we manifest toward what constitutes a major threat to our entire civilization.

civilization.

If Japan succeeds in her conquest of China, she will not stop here. Her occupation of Hainan Island and the Spratley Islands indicates that she has greater ambitions. She aims to set herself up as master of the Pacific. How long will it be before she will, with 150,000 Japanese in the Hawaiian Islands, demand that the Japanese flag be hoisted over this important American outpost in Japan has exhibited a persistent interest in the rich fishing resources in the Alaskan waters. How long will it be, should she succeed in her ambitions on the Asiatic continent, before she pushes her fishing fleet into our northern waters and begins colonization

There are 140,000 Japanese on our mainland, mostly on the Pacific coast. In Los Angeles alone there are in so-called Little Tokyo 40,000 Japanese. Should Japan succeed in her military domination of the Far East, how long will it be before she will make demands that our immigration bars be let down still lower? While we are quite willing to continue to permit Japanese merchants, students, and travelers admission into our country, we feel the necessity of safeguarding our standards of living against the influx of hordes of laborers on low economic levels.

In January of 1929 Mr. Sado Saburi, the Japanese chargé d'affaires in London, was quoted in the Shanghai press as having given utter-in London, was quoted in the Shanghai press as having given utterance to the following sentiments:

"There are those who think that a stage has been reached in the life of Japan when she must decide whether she shall throw in her lot with the East or West. The idea is manifestly one which presupposes antagonism ultimately leading to conflict between the two civilizations and is comprehensible only if one tolerates the policy of a 'yellow peril.' It is, however, entirely too narrow in its conception and far too terrible in its potential consequences to merit consideration by Japan who in her nursuit of the grad of enduring pages. sideration by Japan, who in her pursuit of the goal of enduring peace and the continuous advancement of mankind aspires to serve as a link connecting and harmonizing the civilizations of the East and link connecting and harmonizing the civilizations of the East and the West."

Taking these sentiments, along with those of Mr. Yoshida as quoted in the earlier part of this article, one must be convinced that there are Japanese who think very differently from their military leaders, who are now dictating their country's policies. Were Japan's destinies entrusted to those possessed of these forward-looking sentiments, we should have good reason then to be optimistic regarding the prospects of developing policies of peaceful cooperation with our neighbors on the Pacific. But in our ignorance and apathy we have thus far chosen to give our material support to Japan's militarists, who are obsessed with the ambition to set themselves up as military masters of Asia and of the Pacific, preliminary to world domination, all of which is in keeping with what they are taught to revere as Japan's "manifest keeping with what they are taught to revere as Japan's "manifest destiny." Shall we not, if we continue our drifting policies, invite the annihilation of our standards of living and our democratic institutions?

Mr. President, on June 1, I introduced the joint resolution to which I have referred; and during the remainder of my discussion I wish to discuss the joint resolution. I now ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Any person violating the provisions of this joint resolution or any rule or regulation issued hereunder shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the joint resolution provides:

That in compliance with our treaty engagements, and to conserve our resources for national-defense purposes, there shall be retained within the United States, and denied export therefrom, retained within the United States, and denied export therefrom, all goods, wares, merchandise, munitions, materials, and supplies of every kind and character, except agricultural products, which there is reason to believe will, if exported, be used, directly or indirectly, in violation of the sovereignty, or the independence, or the territorial or administrative integrity of any nation whose sovereignty, independence, and territorial and administrative integrity the United States is obligated by treaty to respect.

Mr. President, I read that language because of the fact that the joint resolution is not an embargo against any other nation. It is not an embargo against any particular nation. It is a resolution which does two things:

First, the Nine Power Pact binds our citizens as well as our Government. The resolution prevents our citizens from themselves exporting to any nation goods which will be used in violation of that treaty. Second, the joint resolution is not an embargo against a nation. It is an embargo against goods. Under the provisions of the joint resolution we could send any kind of goods we chose to Japan except goods which were destined to be used for the purpose of destroying the territorial integrity of China. In the joint resolution nothing is said about Japan. It simply says that if any nation uses goods exported by our citizens for the purpose of destroying the territorial integrity of any country the territorial integrity of which we have agreed to respect, we will stop our citizens from exporting them.

As a matter of fact, if we want to be technical about it, its first point of application would be against England and Canada, because a very large part of the goods prohibited from shipment under the resolution are shipped in English and Canadian ships. There is nothing in the joint resolution which compels an embargo against any particular nation or against any goods except those which are intended to be used in violation of our treaty obligations.

After this question arose there was presented the question as to whether or not we had a right to pass the joint resolution which I described, or the joint resolution introduced by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. PITTMAN]. The basis of the argument was that in 1911 we entered into a treaty with Japan under which we agreed to give to Japan the same sort of treatment, so far as the export of goods is concerned, as any other most-favored nation.

Mr. President, that treaty was proclaimed on February 21, 1911; and I think it is desirable, in order that the RECORD may be complete, that it be printed at this point in the

There being no objection, the treaty was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I do not agree that the 1911 treaty should have prevented our Government from adopting the joint resolution which I introduced. I concede, however, that like all legal questions about which there is an argument, there can be an argument about that question. Under those circumstances I certainly am in no way critical of the Members of this body who contended that before we took further action the 6-months' notice should be given Japan. In matters of this kind, in which we base our position upon a treaty, certainly we must be punctilious. I do not think there was any necessity for our recognizing the 1911 treaty as an obstacle to the proposed action. However, as I say, I am not arguing that point with a view of arguing that my joint resolution or the Pittman joint resolution should be adopted during this session of the Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Schwartz in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the obligations upon our Government, as well as upon the other signatories to the Nine Power Treaty, does not the Senator believe there would be some moral, if not legal, obligation on the part of the United States if one of the signatories to the treaty violated its terms in such a flagrant manner as Japan has violated its terms in its treatment of China? There is an obligation upon our part to respect that treaty and to respect the obligations therein contained by insisting that the territorial integrity and political independence of China shall be respected. Is not that an obligation which imposes upon us the duty to protest against the infraction of the treaty by the assault by Japan upon China, which, of course, is covered by the terms of the treaty referred to?

RESPONSIBILITY IS AMERICA'S

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The whole thesis of my remarks is that by reason of the nine-power agreement we have an obligation upon us to respect the territorial and administrative integrity of China; and that we are violating that obligation. I present this matter as an affirmative violation on our part. The agreement is binding not only upon our Government, but upon our citizens. When our Government sits by and permits our citizens to violate the treaty by making the profit they can make out of sending to Japan materials which we know are to be used by Japan for the purpose of destroying China's territorial integrity, I say we are violating the Nine Power Agreement.

One of the positions I take is that we cannot justify our violation of the Nine Power Agreement, signed 11 years later, upon the basis that we might possibly violate the 1911 treaty with Japan, because Japan also joined with us in the Nine Power Agreement; and it is she who has brought about the situation which makes it necessary for us to insist upon our obligation to comply with the provisions of the Nine Power Treaty.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator is correct if I understand his thesis.

In January of last year I discussed this question and the flagrant violation of the terms of the Nine Power Treaty by Japan, and insisted that our Government take some course which would indicate its condemnation of Japan's policy and our affirmative desire to protect China against the invasion of Japan.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am asking for information. I wonder if the Senator includes shipments of food, gasoline, trucks, and such materials not in the nature of guns or manufactured war weapons.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The resolution does not contemplate a limitation to arms, munitions, and implements of war. As a matter of fact, our furnishing of them to Japan is very unimportant. Japan does not need us to furnish arms, ammunition, and implements of war. What Japan needs is our gasoline, our scrap iron and steel, and other commodities which she uses to manufacture or to propel the manufacture of those things she manufactures for war purposes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Do I understand the Senator to advocate that we should cut off all such exports?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Including food?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No. I do not include food, for the reason that it is almost impossible to tell, when it comes to food, which civilian population would be punished, whether it would the population of China or that of Japan, to use that as an illustration. It is almost impossible to know whether the food would be used to feed people in China or in Japan, and I think a sense of humanity requires that agricultural products used for food should not be included in the embargo.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Does the Senator have a schedule or list?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That would be a function of the executive branch of the Government. The resolution Except agricultural products, which there is reason to believe will, if exported, be used, directly or indirectly, in violation of the sovereignty, or the independence, or the territorial or administrative integrity of any nation.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator is now referring to the resolution introduced by himself?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. President, going back to the question raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which fits right into the point I am discussing, I wish first to read a short quotation from the work, International Law, by Charles Cheney Hyde, found in volume 1, page 422, in which he says:

The setting in motion outside of a state of a force which produces an injurious effect therein, justifies the territorial sovereign in prosecuting the actor when he enters its domain.

It is true we did not actually send our soldiers, we did not enter into China for the purpose of destroying her, but this authority recognizes that the setting in motion outside of a state of forces which later result in the destruction of a territory constitutes an act against them to almost as great an extent and almost as directly as if they were actually within the territory.

I wish to call attention to a proclamation which President Coolidge issued when he proclaimed the Nine Power Treaty:

To the end that the same in every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof-

ATTITUDE OF THE COURTS

For the purpose of getting into the RECORD in order that such use may be made of them as Senators may see fit, I desire to give a few citations in reference to the attitude of our courts upon the question of treaties. I have said several times that a treaty into which the Government enters is obligatory not merely upon the Government but upon its citizens. My reason for repeating it is that the function of the joint resolution I have introduced is to stop our citizens and not merely to stop our Government. That statement was made by the Supreme Court of the United States in Poole v. Fleeger (229 U.S. 447), in which they said:

A treaty is binding upon the Nation and all its citizens and

The Constitution of the United States itself provides:

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land (art. VI, sec. 2).

In the case of Missouri v. Holland (252 U. S. 415), Mr. Justice Holmes used this language in reference to our attitude toward the treaties and indicates a treaty to be of higher sanctity than an act of Congress:

Acts of Congress are the supreme law of the land only when made in pursuance of the Constitution; while treaties are declared to be such when made under the authority of the United States.

In the case of Foster v. Neilson (2 Peters 253-314), the Court said:

Our Constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is, consequently, to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of Congress whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision.

In the case of Davies against Hale, found in 91 United States Reports, page 13, the Court said this:

Treaties which are complete within themselves need no supplementary legislation to give them force and validity.

In construing this particular treaty, knowing the relationship between the nations which were involved at the time, I think it is all important to understand the attitude of our Supreme Court upon the question of the relationship between a nation which is stronger and a nation which is weaker. In the case of Choctaw Nation v. United States (119 U.S. 1), the Supreme Court said:

A treaty between a superior and an inferior nation should be construed in favor of the latter.

In the case of Asakura v. Seattle (265 U. S. 332), the Supreme Court said:

A treaty is to be construed in a broad and liberal spirit, and where two constructions are possible, one restrictive of the rights that may be claimed under it and the other favorable to them, the latter is to be preferred.

In the case of Sullivan v. Kidd (254 U. S. 433) the Supreme Court said:

A treaty is to be executed in the utmost good faith, with a view of making effective the purpose of the high contracting parties.

Now, proceeding with the question of embargo, Justice Bushrod Washington, in the case of Odlin against Insurance Co., 2 Washington Reports, 312–322, said:

What is an embargo? In its nature and design it imposes a temporary restraint; it is a measure of precaution and State policy, intended by the Government either to distress some foreign nation, or to protect the property of its own citizens.

I conclude this branch of the discussion with the statement that we do have a treaty obligation to observe to respect the territorial integrity of China. Our goods are now being used for the purpose of destroying China's territorial integrity. Goods are being shipped by our citizens who are subject to control by our Government in this country. The joint resolution which I have introduced is based upon that treaty, and provides that our Government shall stop our citizens from disobeying the treaty obligations which were imposed upon them by the treaty by shipping goods intended to be used for the purpose of violating a treaty which they as citizens are obligated to respect.

Under these circumstances, since it is not a complete embargo, since it does not refer to any nation, since it is simply an embargo upon goods for a particular use, I am convinced that there never was any necessity of standing by and waiting for the 6-month period to expire. Nevertheless, we have given that notice, and I am not urging that anything in the way of action by the Congress be taken prior to the time when the notice shall become effective.

A WAY TO HELP

Mr. President, a few months ago the Secretary of State, recognizing the situation in Japan and China, called upon the airplane manufacturers of this country voluntarily to desist from shipping their airplanes to Japan. He had no authority; he assumed no authority; he claimed no authority. It was a mere request made to men in business in this country, on the basis that they should not profit by the manufacture of materials to be used in the way, and for the purposes, Japan was using them. That request was almost 100 percent effective. Since the first of the year there have been very few, if any, shipments of airplanes to Japan. I happen to know of one instance of an airplane manufacturer in this country who had an offer, a firm commitment by the Japanese Government, to purchase from that company airplanes at a cash profit of $500,000 over and above the expenses of manufacture.

It was a very attractive and alluring offer so far as the company was concerned, but readily, willingly, and cheerfully that company gave up the right to do that business, because they knew it was wrong, and the Secretary of State had asked them to desist. During the next 6 months' period, if the Secretary of State would ask the business interests of the country, the oil companies, for example, or the junk companies, for example, to desist from making a profit out of the sale of their goods which are being used in violation of our treaty obligations, I think he would receive not a hundred percent cooperation, it is true, but he would receive a very substantial cooperation.

Shortly after the Japanese-Chinese incident occurred in 1937, I introduced a bill in this body to prevent the shipment of scrap steel. I was deluged for several weeks with letters and telegrams of protest coming from those engaged in the junk business in this country. They were simply outraged to think that I would introduce such a piece of proposed legislation. The measure was referred to the committee, and because of its nature I recognized that I could not make the case necessary to secure action upon that particular bill. I reintroduced the bill this year, however, and I have not received a protest from a single source. The people engaged in the junk business in the United States, who in 1937 protested vigorously because of the possibility that they would be deprived of their profits, have registered no protest and no objection to the proposed legislation this year. I think that means something; I think it means that if the Secretary of State would do generally what he did with the airplane industry, he could bring the exports of these materials down to somewhere below 25 percent of their present volume.

In view of the seriousness of the situation with which we are confronted, in view of the fact that for the next 6 months we are going to be compelled to violate a treaty with China because we feel that we cannot take any other position as a result of our 1911 treaty with Japan, I call upon the Secretary of State to ask the business interests of this country to desist from carrying on their traffic during this period of time; and, should he do so, I venture the prophecy that the Secretary of State would achieve very material results.

I wish to conclude by reading from a statement which was made on the floor September 26, 1921, by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. I had read it in the newspapers at the time; it impressed me, and I have not forgotten it:

"Mr. President, there is a law stronger than constitutional law, stronger than legislative law, and that is the moral law, and it finally wins." (Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, addressing the Senate, September 26, 1921, on the Versailles Treaty.)

We do have in this situation, as a result not merely of our treaties but as a result of past experience, past contacts with the Chinese Government and the Chinese people, a very definite obligation. Courts of equity recognize that when people who have a friendly or fiduciary relationship deal with each other there is a greater need for strict compliance with agreements, and that a man who depends upon another and gives to him control of his property or his future has a right to rely upon a greater degree of support from his fiduciary than when they were simply dealing at arm's length.

The same theory applies among governments. Through the years the Chinese people have trusted us. Through the years the Chinese people have relied upon us, and now, in their hour of need, despite our very definite concrete, treaty obligations, we are not carrying out those things which common decency and common honor would compel us to carry out in our relations with China.

Mr. President, I conclude with this one statement:

This above all: to thine own self be true, And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man.

I do not think the people of this country want to be false to their responsibility to the people of China.

THE PREVAILING WAGE

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have long upheld the principle of the prevailing wage. In my judgment, this is the wage that represents the most stable standards of labor and industry in any community. I do not believe the Government should take any step that will destroy these standards. I have seen recurring attacks made on wage standards, but in the end they have always been repulsed, because Americans generally realize that fair wages make for increased purchasing power, on which the welfare of all of our citizens depend.

Mr. President, I am not of the opinion that the prevailing wage is completely satisfactory in every respect. I know there is possibility for improvement in legislation and in administrative rulings made under existing law. However, I have always proceeded on the basis that some standards are better than no standards for work and wages. We are trying to establish these standards. And at such a time it would be most unfortunate for the Government to take any decisive or permanent action that will frustrate the efforts made in private enterprise to establish stabilized procedures in work and wages.

The key to the effect of prevailing-wage legislation upon all interested parties is in the definitions actually applied.

Real dangers to both employers and employees are inherent in the power of administrators to change at will the meaning of such terms as "prevailing," "similar work," and "corresponding classes." Nevertheless it is best that the present administrative definitions shall stand until they can be improved through careful committee study and thoroughgoing legislative action. This is too important a problem to solve in these days of hurried debate. The principles of the prevailing wage, already established in private and public work, should continue to prevail until something better can be found. I shall vote to uphold the principle of the prevailing wage in both Government and private work contracts as opportunity offers and as long as this is the only practical plan provided up to the present time for the establishment of any kind of general work and wage standards whatsoever.

Mr. President, no consideration of the prevailing wage can be made in any comprehensive way under the present conditions of international trade without consideration of the prevailing wage levels of the foreign powers with which we trade. Those prevailing wage levels, based on underpaid and sweated labor, are constantly tending to lower our own, especially in the last few years. My attention has been called repeatedly by constituents in Pennsylvania, from one end of the State to the other, to the unemployment resulting from tariff reductions. Only this morning I was brought face to face with this condition in the zinc industry by a representative group of citizens from Washington County, Pa., who told of the desperate conditions that prevail there. The same condition prevails in the lace industry, boots and shoes, window glass, coal, and farm products.

On July 5, 1939, Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins, issued a statement showing that there is no abatement in the United States in the demand for laces made in Calais, France. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this brief statement included in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE. Washington, July 5, 1939.

NO ABATEMENT IN UNITED STATES DEMAND FOR CALAIS LACES

No slackening has been evident in the strong American demand No stackening has been evident in the strong American demand for French laces which in the past year has brought prosperity to Calais' lace industry, according to a report from Consul J. G. Carter, made public by the Department of Commerce. Local manufacturers are booked up with orders from the United States for many months to come.

May exports of lace from the Calais district to the American market established a new high record not reached even during the prosperous years prior to 1932. The trade with Canada, Australia, and South American countries, which has improved in recent months, was well maintained during May, although there are indi-cations that June will show a falling off in the demand from these markets.

The extent of the increased American demand for Calais lace is indicated in a comparison of May shipments this year to the United States with those of the preceding month of April and with May 1938. The May 1939 exports were higher by 52 percent in value and 39 percent in volume than for April, and by 171 percent in value and 120 percent in volume compared with May 1938. Cumulative shipments covering the first 5 months of 1939 increased 155 percent in value and 137 percent in weight compared with the corresponding period of 1938. corresponding period of 1938.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the same protection that we ask for industry we also seek to an equal extent for agriculture, which is now devastated with low prices. The parity prices between industry and agriculture, about which we heard so much a few years ago, have not been realized. Indeed, we scarcely ever hear mention of parity prices today. The scale of agricultural prices in the United States has pegged to the world market, making it possible for international traders to gamble with farm products, while American farmers and American taxpayers foot the bill. Unless and until an American price, as distinguished from a world price, is fixed for agricultural products there is no price for an American tariff to protect.

We have come to the time when we should realize that no plan for wage rates can be acceptable that does not take into consideration the divergence between American and foreign scales of work and production. Our Nation needs equally with national defense on land, sea, and air, a program of protection that shall make a fair place for our American standards of living, our dollars, our labor, our agriculture, our industry, our investment, and our peace. We must have sound money and a protective tariff. When we begin practically to realize these ideals we shall not be so deeply disturbed as we are at present about prevailing wage scales in America, for out of our abundance we can meet all fair demands.

AMENDMENT OF RETIREMENT LAW OF APRIL 23, 1904—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following report:

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LUNDEEN obtained the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I did not quite understand the situation. Is the Senator from Minnesota going to address the Senate?

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is my purpose. I assume the Senator from Florida desires to make a brief statement?

Mr. PEPPER. I merely desire to say that I have two or three little bills which I hope to have considered some time during the day. I did not know whether or not the Senator intended to address the Senate at considerable length. I did not want to interfere with his remarks, of course, but I give notice that so soon as I am able to get recognition I shall ask for the consideration of Calendar No. 157, Senate bill 1162, Calendar No. 854, House bill 5681, and Calendar No. 928, House bill 6505. I did not want Senators to leave the Chamber with the impression that an effort would not be made to have those bills considered, because I have been trying for some time to have them considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me console the Senator by saying that there is no chance of having them considered

Mr. PEPPER. At least I assure the Senator that I will be here behind this particular desk speaking and seeking for recognition when the Senate adjourns.

RELIEF OF INDIAN SERVICE DISBURSING AGENTS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on March 14 of this year the Senate passed Senate bill 1415 for the relief of disbursing agents. The bill was reported by the committee and passed this body and was sent to the House, and on July 31 the House passed an identical House bill. Notwithstanding the fact that the House had the Senate bill for months in its possession, they saw fit to pass a House bill which was identical. In order to make progress I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the Senate the bill which passed the House, House bill 4085.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit to employees of the Indian Service and in the accounts of J. E. Balmer, S. F. Stacher, and J. W. Elliott, disbursing agents in the Indian Service, for payments made during the period November 1933 to April 1934 to certain employees for the use of their personally owned automobiles as provided in the act of February 14, 1931 (46 Stat. 1103), to the extent that payments have been disallowed solely because the oil and gas used in such automobiles were purchased from Government supplies.

solely because the oil and gas used in such automobiles were purchased from Government supplies.

Sec. 2. Refunds are hereby authorized to be made, out of any money in the Tréasury not otherwise appropriated, to any employees from whom collections have been made and deposited into the Treasury pursuant to disallowances on account of mileage payments made by the disbursing agents named in section 1 hereof.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4085) for the relief of certain disbursing agents and employees of the Indian Service was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1708) to amend the Employers' Liability Act.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Neely, Mr. Burke, and Mr. Austin conferees on the part of the Senate.

WINGS OVER THE EARTH

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, this morning I asked unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record certain articles appearing in the papers concerning aviation. I wish to request that there also be printed an article in today's Star under the title "Aviation Anniversary."

ORVILLE AND WILBUR WRIGHT

Congress has awarded Orville Wright honorary pilot certificate No. 1. I am informed that Mr. Wright's birthday will be celebrated on the 17th of August, and if I had my way about it we would make that day a national holiday, the day which gave to the world this man of genius who has so honored the United States.

Various other editorials have appeared in papers concerning this thirtieth aviation anniversary, and I ask unanimous consent to have these added to the request I made this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

ROADS OF THE AIR

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, addressing ourselves to the subject which is before us today, that of aviation, this being the thirtieth anniversary of the purchase of the first plane by the War Department, we might well think about wings over the earth, about the roads of the air.

ON A MAGIC CARPET TO EUROPE

A recent and deeply stirring personal experience prompts me to call to the attention of the Senate at this time a matter which is, in a very particular and very vital sense, of the utmost public importance to the people of the United States, to their affairs of today, to their future prosperity, to the place of this Nation in the world—more, to the continued existence of the great democratic ideal which on this continent found its birth, and which, now, faces a test more trying than any which has confronted it in the century and a half of its existence and growth.

It was my privilege last month, with my colleague, the junior Senator from New Mexico, and distinguished representatives of the House and the executive departments, to travel to Europe and return by air. We followed the route which Leif Ericson must have first traveled so many centuries ago. The saga of his voyages does not recount for us the number of his days upon the sea. The first navigators of whom we have record took months to make this crossing. The fastest and finest steamships now take days. It is but a feeble reflection of the epochal importance of our experience to say that we spanned the North Atlantic in a matter of hours.

BEFORE LONG IT WILL BE TEN HOURS TO EUROPE

To be exact, the journey in crossing the Atlantic from Botwood, Newfoundland, to Foynes, Ireland, on the famous river Shannon, 18 miles from old Limerick, occupied just 13 hours and 28 minutes. The return took 16 hours and 36 minutes, the difference being accounted for by the trade winds, which blow continuously toward Europe and make the westerly crossing about 3 hours slower, and from the great cities of continental Europe about 5 hours slower.

As twilight fell we saw the wooded heights of Lief Ericson's New Found Land drop beneath the horizon against the reddening sun as he must have seen it, facing months of peril on the surface of the unknown sea, returning to the land of his forebears, tossed in his fragile open craft a thousand years ago.

CELEBRATING A BIRTHDAY 2 MILES UP OVER MIDOCEAN

Far above those lashing waves, calmly, comfortably, cheerfully, in a room more luxurious than any viking castle could ever have known, born on great wings, driven by great engines which were the creatures of American genius, we celebrated the birthday of one of our company. We slept in beds as luxurious as any I have ever known. And with the dawn we saw beneath us the smiling green hillsides, the bright blue waters, the white cottages of Ireland. The President of Eire, Eamonn de Valera, did us the honor at that early hour to greet us as we stepped ashore upon the magnificent trans-Atlantic air terminal which his country has provided. A few hours later we again were received ashore in that great heart of British shipping, the port of Southampton, and well before the close of day we were in the capital of the British Empire, ancient London.

Great as was the personal thrill of this experience, none of us, I think, for a moment forgot that our personal satisfaction might well have been mitigated by the knowledge that we were but witnesses of a triumph for the American flag and all it stands for.

Long has that flag been denied preeminence upon those waters. It flew proudly there, eminently first, in the days of sail, in the days of wooden ships and iron men, in the days when this country politically independent, sought economic and financial gains upon the continent of Europe and the Old World. Then our men of iron, our pioneers, turned their eyes and their efforts from the bitter waves of the Atlantic to the green waves of the prairies to the west. There they built an empire of grain, of cattle, of iron, and of gold, that made us not only economically independent of Europe but made Europe, as a matter of fact, economically dependent upon us.

THE CROSSROADS OF THE WORLD

The conquest and consolidation of our own continental empire, our great homeland, has been completed east and west. For essential purposes, here upon this continent we have all that our teeming millions of people can need or desire. But we have more. We stand midway between two great groups of the world's peoples, those of western Europe, whence came the germs of our own civilization, and those of eastern Asia, where civilizations, older than Europe's, are engaged in a sanguinary clash of war.

Many years ago we legislated to close our western door to invasion by ways of life, by peoples, and by economies that were not ours. For many years we have well-nigh controlled the traffic between those two mighty centers of population. Four years ago an American company made it sure that we dominated and will continue to dominate for many years the newest and the swiftest means of communication between peoples on the Pacific. After long experience and proud achievement in fostering communication with our neighbors in our own hemisphere, Pan American Airways established regular service between San Francisco and Hong Kong, spanning the mighty Pacific for more than 7,000 miles.

PAN AMERICAN LEADS THE WAY

It is not accident that that company has now been the first to establish regular service between our eastern seaboard and the centers of civilization of western Europe. It was because, in the good American way, that company and the men who made it and manage it had acquired the necessary skills of all sorts to enable them to close this last link in air communication among the earth's great centers of population. Before it started to fly the North Atlantic its airplanes had logged four and a half million ocean miles upon the other seas. That was six times as many ocean miles as German planes had flown. It was eight times as many miles as French planes had flown overseas. It was almost 20 times as far as British planes had flown despite the far-flung Empire the British airways sought to link.

Mr. President, at this point I ask permission to introduce, among other editorials and newspaper articles referred to a moment ago, the statements of our distinguished aviator, Charles A. Lindbergh, Dr. Charles G. Abbot, Dr. George W. Lewis, and Edward H. Chamberlain, made at the time of the hearings on the third deficiency appropriation bill for 1939, in which he largely deals with research in aviation.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LINDBERGH ON RESEARCH—STATEMENTS OF DR. CHARLES G. ABBOT AND COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH, MEMBERS OF COMMITTEE; DR. GEORGE W. LEWIS, DIRECTOR OF AERONAUTICAL RESEARCH; AND EDWARD H. CHAMBERLAIN, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT AT SUNNYVALE, CALIF.

Mr. Woodrum. We have an item in House Document 151 for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, for construction and equipment at Langley Field, Va., and Sunnyvale, Calif., $6,140,-000, $2,140,000 to be available for Langley Field and $4,000,000 for Sunnyvale; provided, that the Advisory Committee is authorized to enter into contracts for construction at Sunnyvale at a total cost of not to exceed $10,000,000.

Dr. Abbot, will you give us the justification for this item?
Dr. Abbot. Mr. Chairman, we thank the committee for the opportunity to present what we consider an emergency.

I regret that the chairman of the National Advisory Committee I regret that the chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is unable from illness, and the vice chairman from absence, to testify. My technical knowledge is much less than theirs, but Dr. Lewis is here, and Colonel Lindbergh is here. Mr. Warner has gone, I am sorry to say; but I have been in experimental research myself for over 40 years, and no one knows better than I do what its necessity is. The best schemes one lays out in his mind have to be corrected by trial.

In order not to forget my points, I will ask the committee to indulge me to read what I have prepared. It is under six heads, as follows:

as follows:

"1. What makes the need?
"2. What makes the emergency?
"3. Why not expand Langley Field? "4. Why prefer Sunnyvale?
"5. Will there not be duplication?

"6. Will there not be inefficiency?

"1. What makes the need? Answer. The national defense.
"Several other countries are each devoting individually several several other countries are each devoting individually several times as much study to the increase of offensive power in military airplanes as we do. They do not communicate their results to us, Hence they are forging ahead, particularly in the item of speed. The consequence is that our air force, if it should be forced to fight with them, would even now be at a disadvantage which would be disastrous. And so rapid is the progress made by this hothouse forcing of military-airplane research in certain foreign countries that we fall further behind monthly in that basic knowledge which is only to be gained by costly experiments.

"2. What makes the emergency? Answer. The world's unquiet condition.

"No man can foresee when war storms may break which might involve us. It is hazardous to delay enlarging our research program for 12 months until appropriated for by the next session of Congress. We are already far behind the foreign accomplishment and getting behind further every month. We cannot approach the pace set abroad until the facilities contemplated in this estimate are appropriated for and put into operation.

"3. Why not expand Langley Field? Answer. For three principal reasons.

"Firstly, because in an emergency it is not wise to have all the eggs in one basket. We are not far from the time, possibly it has already unknown to us arrived by the progress of foreign research, when a foreign foe could construct such long-range airplanes as could be sent before the declaration of war (as is now fashionable) to wreck Langley Field. Or the foreign foe might employ agents here to do such bombing as has lately been done in London.

"Again, fire and flood might work destruction. Several years ago a hurricane put Langley Field 3 or 4 feet under salt water. Such a catastrophe would produce a lamentable delay in our investigations.

"Secondly, large structures and additional power requirements are contemplated in the proposed research program. Space is limited at Langley Field, and sufficient additional power is not available there.

"Thirdly, and most important, over 60 percent of the airplane building for military purposes is along the Pacific coast from Seattle down to San Diego. While engines are almost entirely built in the East, engine research does not require large high-speed wind tunnels. It is the play of air streams of 500 miles an hour and more on airplane surfaces that involves research of a mide variety of kinds on the structures of the modern military

"Now that hundreds of millions of dollars are to be expended on Now that hundreds of millions of dollars are to be expended on military airplanes, new problems must be solved for every new type, lest the money be wasted. To ship models and experts from the west coast to the East for testing purposes, and back and forth perhaps several times before the correct solution is made, in making each new development, is wasteful of time and money in the extreme. Moreover, there is a tendency to omit tests that really ought to be made because of this time element involved. In illustration I may made because of this time element involved. In illustration I may inform the committee that every new type of airplane that has been submitted to the committee for investigation at Langley Field has been improved in speed from 20 to 35 miles per hour. The laboratories at Langley Field and Sunnyvale will deal equally as well with basic new problems from which the findings will be used by all manufacturers throughout the country, but for problems of applied research so essential in the development of new types of simplenes. research, so essential in the development of new types of airplanes on the west coast, where over 60 percent of the airplane construction is under way, it is essential to have the new laboratory on the west coast.

"4. Why prefer Sunnyvale? Answer. Because selected after thorough study by experts.

"Sunnyvale is in a valley near sea level at the south tip of San Francisco Bay. It is on a military reservation where 70 acres (twice as much as we have at Langley Field) is available for laboratories. It is adapted to both naval and Army airplane researches. It may It is adapted to both havai and Army airplane researches. It may be reached within 2 hours by airplane from any airplane factory on the Pacific coast. It is available to large power sources. It is not in the earthquake faults of California. It is not subject to inundation by storms. A committee of experts comprising highest officials of Army, Navy, and civil aeronautics chose it after extensive research all over the country.

"5. Will there not be duplication? Answer. No.

"New problems will be attacked at Sunnyvale with new and more powerful apparatus. Tests will be made there which cannot be made in timely fashion at Langley Field, only because there are not hours enough in the day to keep up at Langley Field to Army, Navy, and commercial demands, let alone to do needed basic research equal to that of foreign nations.

"Langley Field facilities are still to be operated at full capacity, and they are suited to most problems. Sunnyvale would be needed and would be a highly valuable laboratory station if it merely duplicated Langley Field in every piece of equipment. But the military race has brought us into new fields of speed where even more powerful research apparatus is required. And our enormous airplane-construction program has heaped up more testing than can possibly be done in timely fashion at Langley Field. Besides all this, to bring that testing across the continent is wasteful of both time and money.

"6. Will there not be inefficiency? Answer. Separation geographically does not mean divided control.

"Both research establishments will be under the direction of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. Problems will be assigned to one or the other station as most convenient, but will not be duplicated."

Now, gentlemen, Dr. Lewis and Colonel Lindbergh are here and will be able to answer questions in regard to this matter, I am sure, better than I could myself.

Mr. Woodrum. We had rather extensive hearings on this when the matter was up before. I wonder if we can have a copy of those hearings. I do not want to duplicate anything that has been gone

LOCATIONS OF WIND TUNNELS AND OTHER EXPERIMENTAL FACILITIES

Mr. TABEE. Can somebody give us a picture of what wind tunnels there are outside of Langley Field at this time in this country, and what experimental resources or facilities this country has, operated either privately or by the Government?

Dr. Lewis. I can answer that,

Dr. Lewis. I can answer that.

This country is fortunate in having research facilities at universities, largely as the result of the Guggenheim gift. Universities that have wind-tunnel facilities are as follows: Massachusetts Institute of Technology, California Institute of Technology, University of Weshington, New York University, University of Michigan, Georgia School of Technology at Atlanta. There are wind tunnels also at Detroit University, Carnegle Institute, and Purdue University.

These wind tunnels are all available for research work and we

These wind tunnels are all available for research work, and we have included in our request today an item to support research in universities.

The progress in research in Europe is so tremendous as compared with what we are doing here at the present time that we have not only got to use what we have asked for at Sunnyvale, if that is made available, but we have got to use all the facilities in this country, if we hope to catch up.

AMOUNT AND PURPOSE OF SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS CONTAINED IN SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL FOR 1939

Mr. WOODRUM. May I put in the record at this point an excerpt from the hearings on the second deficiency appropriation bill for

On February 23, 1939, this committee had hearings on these items, and they extend from pages 29 to 78, inclusive, and that might be referred to for some of this information.

Now, Doctor, may I ask you this: I do not know whether you have this committee print before you.

Dr. Lewis. I have before me the break-down of what we are asking for in funds.

Mr. Woodrum. And you have the revised request, do you?

Mr. Chamberlin. We do have the revised request. It has not

Mr. Woodrum.

Mr. Woodbrum. What did we give you in the bill which we passed? We gave you some of the things that you asked for. What did we give you?

Dr. Lewis. You gave us $2,140,000 for structures at Langley Field, and you gave us an increase of $105,960 for increased personnel.

sonnel.

Mr. Woodrum. That was because of the increased facilities at Mr. Woodrum. That was because of the increased facilities at Langley Field which we gave you?

Dr. Lewis. That is right. You gave us $118,020 for increased electric power, supplies, and equipment.

Mr. Woodrum. That is the total that we gave you?

Dr. Lewis. That is the total that you gave us; yes.

Mr. Woodrum. That totals $2,363,980?

Mr. CHAMBERLIN. That is right.

Mr. Woodrum. And you are asking now for what; $10,359,000?

Mr. TABER. No; $6,140,000.

AMOUNT AND PURPOSE OF ESTIMATES FOR SUNNYVALE, CALIF.

Mr. Cannon. How much was appropriated for Sunnyvale? Mr. Woodrum. None. That is what we did not allow. You are asking $4,000,000 for Sunnyvale?

You are asking $4,000,000 for Sunnyvale?
Dr. Lewis. $4,000,000 for Sunnyvale; $104,020 for training personnel for Sunnyvale; for research in universities, $250,000; and for a west-coast coordinator, which was deleted from the last consideration of this item, $5,000; a total of $4,359,020.

Mr. Wooddrum. Which we did not allow?
Dr. Lewis. Yes, sir.
Mr. Wooddrum. You asked for a $6,000,000 contractual authority?
Dr. Lewis. We asked for that the last time.
Mr. Wooddrum. That was in addition to the $4,000,000?
Dr. Lewis. That was in addition to the $4,000,000.
Mr. Wooddrum. So that makes $10,000,000?
Dr. Lewis. $10,359,020.
Mr. Wooddrum. Now, is this statement which you have just handed me the part of the program which you asked for before that we did not allow?

Dr. Lewis. That is the part of the program that you did not allow.

Mr. WOODRUM. Has there been any change in that?

Dr. Lewis. No, sir.
Mr. Woodrum. It is exactly the same?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is clastly the same.

Mr. WOODRUM. And it includes the Sunnyvale operation?

Dr. Lewis. The Sunnyvale operation.

Mr. WOODRUM. All right, sir.

ADVANTAGE OF HAVING PLANT LOCATED ON WEST COAST

Mr. TABER. There are two or three things that seem to bother me Mil. TAREK. There are two or three things that seem to bother me a little bit on this. You tell us that Langley Field is so near the coast that it is subject to bombing. Sunnyvale is in the same position, only on the west coast. Now, is that a desirable location for that kind of set-up or not? I am rather wondering, in view of your suggestion that Langley Field was subject to bombing, if Sunnyvale would be the sort of location that we should embark on. What do you think about it? you think about it?

you think about it?

Dr. Lewis. That was very carefully considered by the committee, Mr. Taber, and balanced against the value of that particular development over a period of years to our development of aircraft in this country. The Sunnyvale site was considered, with a number of sites inland, but it was desirable to have it near the aircraft industry, near a center of population, where power is available, and where there is a good labor and supply market.

Mr. Taber. Now, this California field is just as much subject to bombing as Langley Field, is it not?

Dr. Apara, Not from Europe sir

Dr. Abbot. Not from Europe, sir. Mr. Taber. No; but from the other side. Dr. Abbot. Still there would hardly be a combination to bomb both.

Mr. TABER. You figure that they would not both be under attack

Mr. TABER. You ingure that they would not both be under attack at the same time?

Dr. Abbot. I think not, sir.

Mr. Ludlow. I would like to ask, in line with Mr. Taber's questions, whether you gentlemen, who are experts, have considered the Midwest for this location? I happen to represent a city which prides itself on being called the Crossroads of America—Indianapolis. They have within 24 hours apprised me that they are going to make a very earnest bid for this research station. They are close to an adequate labor supply; they have splendid railroad facilities, geographical location, and everything; and without making a special plea for my city, I wonder why there are not certain arguments for the Midwest that can be advanced as against the Pacific coast. For instance, protection from foreign invasion and security. Have those considerations been taken into greater account?

Dr. Abbot. I consider, Mr. Chairman, that the probability is that there will be other stations required in order to keep up with the immense development of research in foreign lands; that the one which is immediately needed now is Sunnyvale, on account of the large production of military planes on the west coast, but that it is probable that the Committee will be coming to the Congress later on for other stations in other parts of the country as well. Is on for other stations in other parts of the country as well. Is not that so, Dr. Lewis?

Dr. Lewis. That is so.

Mr. Taber. Have we quite a set-up in Wright Field in Cleveland

Dr. Abbot. There is a testing station at Wright Field for the uses of the Army.

Dr. Lewis. An experimental engineering station.
Mr. Lambertson, My colleague speaks about the Midwest. The Midwest would be Wichita.

Mr. Luplow. That is a question of interpretation. LOCATION OF WIND TUNNELS AND OTHER EXPERIMENTAL FACILITIES

Mr. TABER. I am a little bothered about another thing. men in the Army are, of course, always interested in development. They told us that Germany already had 5 research laboratories, and as I understood Dr. Lewis when he enumerated the list of research activities that we have, he enumerated, if I remember right, 10 or 12 places that had wind tunnels. He did not enumerate Wright Field, and he did not enumerate the set-up in Philadelphie. Philadelphia.

Dr. Lewis. May I answer that, Mr. TABER? Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Dr. Lewis. I understood you to ask me about the educational institutions that had facilities for wind tunnels. I did not mention facilities of the Army, Navy, and Bureau of Standards.

Mr. TABER. NO; I asked you where the wind tunnels were, and the research facilities. I did not mention education.

Dr. Lewis. There is a wind tunnel at Wright Field, and they are constructing a larger one.

Dr. Lewis. There is a wind tunnel at Wright Field, and they are constructing a larger one.

Mr. Taber. When the last aeronautical program for the Army was under consideration, at the hearing held by the subcommittee in charge of the Army appropriation bill, General Arnold said, as appears on page 32 of that hearing:

"The construction of any new research facilities for the N. A. C. A. would have little effect on our production of planes to bring the number to the 5,500 level. Likewise, the securing of more performance from planes now on hand would be dependent on the research facilities or the laboratory facilities that we have at the present time, but additional facilities would help us 2, 3, or 4 years from now. It would take that long before the facilities could be created."

What about that?

Dr. Lewis. We plan for Sunnyvale to have the first wind tunnel

Now. It would take that long before the facilities could be created."
What about that?

Dr. Lewis. We plan for Sunnyvale to have the first wind tunnel ready in 9 months to a year, to be available to actually assist in the design of the new type of airplanes.

Mr. Taber. Here is a statement with reference to the location of these facilities, made by Colonel Jouett, representing the manufacturers, as it appears on page 325 of the same hearing. The question was as to whether research facilities should be near the center of airplane production. Colonel Jouett said:

"Not necessarily near the center of airplane production, because, in some ways, it is better to have them a little distance from the center of airplane production, because then the airplane-manufacturing people are not so inclined to bother the fundamental researcher. Langley Field has some facilities for applied research, in that they have a water run where they try out floats, and a full-size wind tunnel and other facilities where wings can be tested. In general, however, a university like Boston Tech or California Tech or the various others around the country can have facilities that would be of great benefit to the manufacturer in carrying out applied research. They should be handy to the manufacturer so that he has not transportation problems or does not have to waste a great deal of time visiting them."

For the California manufacturers we have a set-up in southern California, and we have another set-up in the University of Washington for the people in the Northwest, with wind tunnels and research facilities.

I am wondering to what extent those facilities take care of the needs of these people out there.

I am wondering to what extent those facilities take care of the needs of these people out there.

Dr. Lewis. They do not begin to meet the needs at the present time, and it is necessary for the Government to have research facilities on the west coast if we are going to safeguard the expenditure of all the money we are going to put into military airplanes. What we are asking for is $4,000,000, not simply to be spent in a year, but as a permanent investment.

AVAILABILITY OF RESULTS OF RESEARCH BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Cannon. To what extent are the results of the research done by foreign governments available to other countries?

Dr. Lewis. In Germany, none.

Mr. Cannon. Then your cursory observations would be of no value, the results of their researches were not available on the surface.

Dr. Lewis. No. The results of their researches are not available; but their new wind-tunnel equipment, which is in advance of anything we have in this country, indicates they are obtaining valuable results in the development of high-speed airplanes. One wind tunnel has a speed of 700 miles an hour and requires 15,000 horsepower.
Mr. Taber. Is there anything like that contemplated in this California project?

Dr. Lewis. Yes, sir.
Mr. Taber. How high is that speed, and how much power is involved in it?

Dr. Lewis. We have listed that as a wind tunnel, with a capacity of 600 miles an hour but the horsepower may be changed to increase the air speed. That was put down before I went to Germany.

NUMBER AND LOCATION OF RESEARCH STATIONS NEEDED Mr. Ludlow. How many research stations do you think we ought to have in this country?

Dr. Lewis. I would like to ask Colonel Lindbergh to answer that question.

Colonel LINDBERGH. It is hard to answer that definitely. I think

Colonel Lindbergh. It is hard to answer that definitely. I think Dr. Lewis has very accurately stated the situation abroad.

While it is true that a few years ago we definitely led in research, largely through the N. A. C. A., we have now fallen seriously behind so far as our military research facilities are concerned. During a recent period when foreign countries had relatively less research facilities than they now have, even during that period they went ahead of us in performance of military aircraft. So I cannot see any chance for us to catch up with them again on military performance abroad without increasing our research facilities.

Our manufacturers and scientists are I believe as able as any in

Our manufacturers and scientists are, I believe, as able as any in the world. But they have not the necessary equipment and necessary facilities to keep up with the people abroad.

As to numbers, I think it is a little misleading when we speak about wind tunnels at these different universities. They should not be compared to the research stations we have, although they are of extreme importance. They should be used largely for training personnel, for the training of students in aeronautical qualifications.

As Dr. Lewis said, most of the large ones were put in by the Guggenheim Foundation. At the present time some of those are Guggenheim Foundation. At the present time some of those are in a pretty difficult condition.

I was in California recently and I stopped at one university where the original Guggenheim grant has been exhausted. There is even a question whether they can carry on the work for another year.

To my mind it is just as important to keep the universities in a position so that they can do this work and educate their students as it is to put in large additional stations.

I think if we put in another research station it is advisable to put it on the west coast because over half of our aircraft industry is on the west coast.

If we put another station on the west coast and give reasonable support to the university facilities that now exist we will be taking a wise step. And I cannot overemphasize the importance of sup porting these universities. I think that is one of the most vital matters now facing us because they need that badly.

If we will support the universities and put in the additional research station, then I think we will be taking a long step toward putting ourselves in a position to regain the leadership we once held.

I do not mean to give the impression that we have lost all of our leadership. Our manufacturing equipment and workman-ship is still ahead of that abroad. But in the major types of military aircraft we have fallen behind, and that is why I believe it is so important to increase our research facilities. I think that is the key, without which we cannot equal foreign nations.

Mr. Ludlow. Without desiring to commit you as to the matter of a choice between Wichita and Indianapolis, what would be your thought about having a research station in the middle part of the country?

Colonel Lindbergh. Without placing the location, I think there should be an engine research station eventually established somewhere in the eastern section of the country. That should be in relation to the needs of the factories that now exist. But if we have an aerodynamics research station it would be a mistake, I think, to put it too far from the west coast, inasmuch as we now have one on the east coast, and I think the major part of our production is on the west coast, between southern California and Seattle Wesh and Seattle, Wash.

Mr. Lublow. Assuming that ultimately there will be several re-search stations, and if we had three or four, how would you distribute them?

Colonel Lindbergh. I would have to make a study of that. I think the next step should be to put one on the west coast. After that, offhand, I should think we should need an engine research station on this side of the center of the country.

On the other hand, I think it is a little too early to suggest where that should be placed. If we can make use of the universities, that will help us a great deal now.

STATUS OF FACILITIES AT UNIVERSITIES

Dr. Abbot. A great deal has been said about the facilities at the universities. They can do good theoretical work and solve important smaller problems, but they do not have wind tunnels of anything like a capacity of 700 miles an hour—great, tremendous wind tunnels, capable of doing the advanced work that has to be done in view of the new conditions.

Colonel LINDBERGH. No; their wind tunnels are, and I think should be, relatively small.

Dr. Abborr. They do excellent work as it is, but they cannot do this other work that is required.

Dr. Lewis. Our committee has encouraged educational institutions as much as possible with the funds that have been allotted to us, but $25,000 is a very meager amount.

But the universities come through in fine shape. I have a list of 12 reports that our committee has issued as a result of research that we have allotted to universities which we knew had the particular equipment which made them well qualified to carry out those research problems.

The point I want to particularly emphasize is that with the research facilities abroad we have to use everything we have in this country if we are going to catch up. That is why we are asking for more money to encourage research in the educational institutions

Mr. Differ. Do you look upon the Sunnyvale proposition as a contribution in the field of the development of commercial airplanes as well as military airplanes?

Dr. Lewis. I certainly look upon the Sunnyvale proposition as a very vital proposition in both fields.

Colonel Lindbergh. May I emphasize again the importance of the work done at the universities, especially in view of the small expenditures at those institutions. We are not at this time putting a tremendous amount of money in the work at the universities, but I think there is not anything more in the work at the universities, but I think there is not anything more in the work at the universities. sities, but I think there is not anything more important than that Work.

Mr. Woodrum. We are very glad to have had you gentlemen with us this afternoon and appreciate the statements you have given us, and I want to thank Colonel Lindbergh particularly and say that we are especially glad to have had you with us this after-

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I have just stated the comparison between the miles of flight made by the Pan American Airways and flyers of other nations. The North Atlantic has been flown many times. As early as 1919 the two gallant British flyers, Alcock and Brown, were the first to make the crossing. Our own Navy was not far behind in that same year with the organized flight of the NC boats under command of Admiral Towers, now head of naval aviation, and Captain Read, the skipper of the one flying boat to complete the route to the continent and who now gallantly commands the Navy's great aircraft carrier, the Saratoga.

Lindbergh, Byrd, Chamberlain, innumerable others have made that flight as a matter of individual achievement in American planes. Englishmen, Frenchmen, Germans, and Italians have done it in the planes of their countries. But when it became obvious that between these two groups of people, our own and those of western Europe, a regular air service was inevitable, Pan American Airways, an organization of enthusiastic, intelligent, skillful young Americans, was the only organization in all the world able to establish that route this year upon a regular basis of business regularity. By air, in the modern way, and from every direction, we control access to our country, here at the crossroads of the

THE AMERICAN WAY WINS

Hence the importance of this first commercial crossing of the North Atlantic. Hence the triumph of Pan American Airways is more than a great success for a corporate entity. Communication by air was inevitable. Was the chanel of that communication to be our kind of a chanel or a kind of a channel very different from ours?

Let us look back for a moment. Let us remember that the art of mechanical flight is an art native to our own land. Two ingenious Americans, the Wright brothers, Orville and Wilbur, solved that problem. On their own, with their own slendor resources, they brought to man the wings he had aspired to since our earliest myths. Barely a decade after their first flight on the dunes of Kitty Hawk, their invention was put to the sanguinary test of war. In war's crucible, for almost 3 years before we were drawn into it, the airplane grew from an instrument of doubtful scouting value into a decisive implement of combat. Our airplanes played no great part in that combat. The stress of war in Europe had forced technical development so far that when we were drawn into the maelstrom we never caught up with the aeronautic advances of either our associates or our enemies.

WORLD WAR AND AVIATION

Hence it was perhaps natural that for a decade after the war we lagged behind in the civil use of aviation. In allied and enemy countries bombers were converted into transports. Within a year of the close of hostilities Europe was criss-crossed by more or less subsidized air-transport lines, while in this country civil aviation was confined to the occasional barnstormer and to more or less sporadic and unreliable attempts to carry the mail.

Out of those attempts to carry the mail came a young man who, by his fine character and courage, perhaps more than through any technical advance he demonstrated, fired the imagination of the United States and of the world. I refer to the flight to Paris of the Lone Eagle, Charles A. Lindbergh.

The flight came near to the climax of a mad era of speculation. Even though most people said they would never fly "unless Lindbergh were the pilot" there were thousands who thought that financially the airplane could carry them to the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. Most of these deluded gentry risked not only their own but that great commodity of those days, other people's money. There was at least one brilliant exception. Juan Terry Trippe had been a naval aviator during the war. His ancestors had been seafarers for generations. From the banking house in which he sought to start his business career, his eyes and his imagination kept drifting to the sea and to the sky.

YOUNG ENTHUSIASTS PITCH IN

Fortunately he found other young men with money and with the same imaginative trend as his own. Twelve of them contributed $25,000 each, of their own money, not other people's money. And then, in the autumn of 1927 they found that little company named Pan American Airways, Inc., one of whose active officers was George Grant Mason, Jr., now a distinguished member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. That company had won a contract for carrying the mail between Key West and Havana. And Mr. Trippe and his friends had $300,000 with which to finance the commencement of that short flight, the beginning of the almost 42,000 miles of foreign air-mail routes over which Pan American's airplanes fly today.

Mr. Trippe and his group not only had the money, they had made arrangements for the use of the first generally successful multimotored plane, the Fokker trimotor, then new to this country and to the world. Up to this moment it is sound aviation doctrine that only in multimotored planes is it safe to carry passengers. Up to this moment the use of multimotored airplanes is typical of the fashion in which Mr. Trippe and his associates have expanded their business. They have always known what the next step in that business would be, and they have always been prepared to take it.

Having started to Cuba the next step was obviously to go further into Latin America. The step was not as easy as it seemed. As early as 1919 Dr. Von Bauer, an Austrian war ace, had inaugurated an air service in Colombia and extended it up through Central America to Cuba. By 1929, German and French lines had encircled South America and were preparing to connect those lines with their home countries by flying the relatively short ocean hop between Dakar, in Africa, and Natal in Brazil. By the use of fast cruisers across this stretch of ocean, the French had already made Buenos Aires only 9 days from Paris, whereas it was still 18 days away from New York.

AVIATION SUPREME IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

I will say to the Senate that I would not consume the Senate's valuable time on this occasion if I did not think that the subject is of vital importance to the defenses of this country of ours; that it is vital that we hold the supremacy of the air in the Western Hemisphere, and that we sail the clippers of the air, as the clippers of the sea once were, into every harbor and port of the earth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some 2 years ago Mr. Trippe, the head of the Pan American Airways, came before the Senate Committee on Appropriations and testified at length about the building up and the goal of the Pan American system. I wish to say to the Senator that, while that hearing was confidential, having never been printed or made public, we were reminded, by that recital, of the remarkable romantic stories of the Count of Monte Cristo, Jules Verne's 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea, and others of a similar nature, only the recital which was made to us by Mr. Trippe was infinitely more interesting and practical and one which ought to make every American feel proud that he is an American citizen. I hope that sometime those proceedings may be published in the newspapers, because it would be a marvelous thing for the American people to read the portrayal that was made at that time by Mr. Trippe to the committee.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the Senator indicate the date of the hearing referred to, and the nature of the hearing?

Mr. McKELLAR. Time passes so rapidly that I cannot

Mr. LUNDEEN. What committee was it?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was before the Committee on Appropriations 2 or 3 years ago.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Was that a subcommittee?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was before a subcommittee, but I think most of the members of the committee attended. The statement was remarkable.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the able Senator that I have observed Mr. Trippe, and I have a profound admiration not only for his ability, but for his Americanism and his outlook upon the future of aviation, the dawn of which we are just witnessing—and it is merely the dawn.

Mr. McKELLAR. It might be stated further that Mr. Trippe was 38 years of age at the time he testified. His statement was the most remarkable exhibition of a great industry that I ever heard related by anyone.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator; and I will say further that Mr. Trippe heads an able group of officers and men unequaled anywhere in the aviation world.

The statement of the Senator is well taken. I wish to touch upon other companies besides Pan American, the American Export Co., and other companies which are in competition. They are American companies. We are all proud of their marvelous achievements.

I have just referred to the French making the Paris-Buenos Aires journey in only 9 days, when we were taking 18 days from New York.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE

This was at a time when, while the European nations had been busy in their own cockpit of war, we had increased our share in the two-billions-a-year foreign trade of South America from about 16 percent before the war to 30 percent afterward.

Into this crisis in our foreign trade leaped Mr. Trippe, Mr. Mason, and their young associates. They brought to their organization men who knew Latin America and men who knew flying. Again, on their own, with their own money for negotiation and organization, they acquired flying rights in almost every one of the countries to the south of us.

I should like to remind Senators that these men acquired their own air fields and lighted them. They established weather and other services in South America and paid for them themselves, without Government subsidy. We certainly owe any company which performs a service like that a tremendous debt of gratitude.

WE CIRCLE SOUTH AMERICA

By 1936, from Los Angeles, Brownsville, and Miami, Pan American lines went to and through Latin America paralleling the Germans and the French, penetrating the interior where the Europeans had not gone, and generally making their system not only the most important air line in the Southern Hemisphere but the most far-flung means of transportation of any kind in that hemisphere.

Remember that the French and the Germans got their start in Latin America because of the surplus of war planes on their hands after 1918. Strangely enough, that phenomenon is repeating itself; but this time it is not a surplus of airplanes remaining over after a war. It is a surplus of airplanes existing because of frantic preparation for war. Those airplanes are being dumped into South America not only by the Germans but by the Italians and to a lesser extent by the British and the French. They are being offered to companies in South America at prices only possible for surplus war material.

Let us not minimize the danger of such measures, not only to our business in South America but to the actual military isolation of this country. An air-transport plane cannot easily be converted into a bomber. But the same base from which a transport flies is adequate to a bomber. The same radio beams that guide a transport may send a bomber on its mission and bring it back home. The same engines and spare parts which serve to keep a transport plane in the air may well keep a bomber at the peak of its flying efficiency. These foreign civil air bases and all their facilities are today within easy bombing range of a sector of the United States, including this very city of Washington.

STRATEGIC AIR BASES

For that reason I have introduced five joint resolutions concerning islands on the west coast within 1,500 miles of the Nicaraguan-Panama Canal Zone; islands which belong to various countries and which should now be acquired by the United States. They should be under our flag.

Just the other day I was glad to insert in the Record an article reporting that the Canal Zone authorities favored these measures. I have two other joint resolutions concerning islands to the east of the Canal Zone and along our Atlantic seacoast.

I hope that the Congress of the United States, perhaps in the coming year or sometime in the near future, may act upon these joint resolutions or on similar measures. I want to see this thing done. If the majority wish to take the matter up, I shall be delighted to support them, of course.

OUR GOVERNMENT STEPS IN

In many cases the very arrogance of nations which seek to supplant us with our southern neighbors is defeating its own purpose. The long record of achievement of American planes and of Pan American Airways can stand the test of that kind of competition. Every possible measure is being taken to help them meet that test. By lighting and marking the airway through our own West Indies the Civil Aeronautics Authority is ready to enable Pan American to shorten its time to Buenos Aires by almost a day.

However, all that our Government may do does not alter the fact that the real burden of competition in South America rests upon the broad shoulders of a private American company. Its competitors from Europe are not only directly sponsored and strictly controlled by their own governments; they are heavily subsidized and consciously directed to the attainment of economic and strategic ends.

CAN AMERICA HOLD HER PLACE?

Let us take no fatuous assurance from the fact that the United States led the world in aeronautical exports in 1938, with $68,000,000 worth of planes, engines, and accessories. I have just seen an analysis of the world trade in aeronautical material prepared by the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, which represents all important aviation manufacturers in the United States. For the first time Germany led Great Britain in second place in the aeronautical export field. Italy was fourth, and France was fifth. The important fact in those figures is that Germany and Italy combined, exporting $36,000,000 worth, led France and England combined by almost $6,000,000. Further analysis of the figures shows that these powers thus assumed the lead largely because of their exports to South America.

Our aeronautical trade in South America is important. In 1938 we sold there $12,518,000 of such goods, providing a full year's employment for 3,000 of our wage earners at home. Germany and Italy sold in South America last year some $7,400,000 worth of aeronautical material, which would have provided a year's work for 2,000 more of our artisans had it been bought in the United States.

BATTLE FOR SUPREMACY IN SOUTH AMERICA

The result very largely of this intensive drive by these countries for this kind of trade in Latin America is that, for the first time this year, German-owned or German-controlled air lines have more route-miles in our southern hemisphere than we have; for where the equipment is of one national origin in South America, operation will be in the same national hands. This is particularly true of the German and Italian equipment, for these countries have pushed its sale in South America by the most intensive methods of penetration. German salesmen who go to South America boast that they are prepared for their task by training, not only in the design, operation, and maintenance of German planes and equipment, but by comprehensive courses in the history, politics, economics, and social habits of our neighbors to the south, and, of course, by intense indoctrination in their own national socialism and the best methods of spreading its ideas among the peoples to whom they are sent as trade emissaries.

Can we meet such competition? I venture to believe that we can. Wherever our planes and engines come into competition with the planes and engines of any other nation on even terms, without political or nationalistic pressure, they win the popular support of patronage. This is particularly true, for instance, on the lines of the Royal Dutch Airlines. Despite the small extent of Holland, and despite its absorption first in the development of the great air line which binds the mother country to its colonies in the East Indies, clear across Europe and Asia, the Royal Dutch Airlines have successfully operated a network of passenger and mail lines throughout Europe for the past few years very largely because they have used American airplanes, which by their superior speed and comfort draw patronage from all passengers who have a choice between them and the planes manufactured by any European power.

AMERICA FIRST THROUGH THE AIR TO CHINA

So it has been in the air-transport struggle in South America. Up to the present time Pan American has not only held its own there, but has acquired the experience in foreign and ocean flying which enabled it 4 years ago, when need arose to span the Pacific, to make stepping stones out of Hawaii, Midway, Wake, Guam, and Manila, and bring the American flag first through the air to China.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER-IN THE AIR

But if, at this juncture, Government fails to play its part, the results may be tragic. Government has a part to play in husbanding and directing typical American ingenuity and initiative. Look at the lesson of all industry. That industry which fails to husband and direct its own initiative is a dead industry. Millions of dollars are spent every year in directing initiative in every worth-while industry in the United States. It is husbanded and directed through research.

RESEARCH, RESEARCH, AND STILL MORE RESEARCH

I wish I could emphasize the word "research" to all Senators within the hearing of my voice and all Senators who are not now in the Chamber because of other and important business. I wish we would emphasize research. I have inserted in the Record the statement of Colonel Lindbergh, because the statement has been repeatedly made that the Germans have 10 times the research facilities which we have. I am not reciting any of these statements about foreign countries in any spirit of hostility. There is every reason why we should have appropriated funds for Sunnyvale, the research establishment on the west coast, or for other like establishments. We should provide ample research facilities.

The aviation industry has not lagged behind in this respect. Some $40,000,000 has been expended by the private makers of airplanes, motors, instruments, and equipment in the last 3 years in merely finding out what better kinds of airplanes, motors, instruments, and equipment can be made. But there has been a sad lack of coordination for all of those fine efforts. No private industry in aviation can afford to cover all of the ramifications to which research into even the simpler problems may lead. That requires the disinterested service of Government.

Government has long accepted that responsibility in its establishment of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, with its research center at Langley Field, Va. Langley Field was the model for all research centers in aviation.

It was copied in almost every other country with pretensions to power in the air. It was more than copied. Within the last 3 years it has been reproduced over and over again until now, we are credibly informed, Germany alone has no less than six research centers, any one of which is as large as Langley Field and, perhaps, as fruitful.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

We do not have to guess about that. That fine young American, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, with whose distinguished father I had the honor to serve in the House of Representatives has, tragically and certainly through no fault of his own, been compelled to spend the last 4 years away from his native land. That time was not wasted.

At the cost of his leisure, at the cost of the privacy he values so highly, sacrificing the company of the little family to which he is so deeply attached, he has traveled through every country in Europe; and everywhere the magic of his name opened doors to him that were closed to all others.

And now back in this country he has brought to the committees of this Congress the most definite information any of them have yet received as to the lengths to which aviation has developed abroad. And not the least startling phase of his reports has been his conclusion, several times repeated, that unless we press on with our research we will soon be outdistanced in all fields of aviation as, he believes, we are already outdistanced in certain special fields.

I should like to have my fellow citizens realize, with me and with other Senators, that so rapidly does this great industry move forward that, unless we keep pace with the forward movement, we will be left hopelessly behind.

On July 10 Colonel Lindbergh appeared before a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee to plead for the passage of the bill to establish a second Langley Field on the West coast. Unqualifiedly he stated that unless certain research projects were begun—projects for which the facilities at Langley Field are admittedly inadequate—there will be certain definite deficiencies in the airplanes now being designed to carry the American flag, in competition with others, in South America and elsewhere in the world.

AMERICA CANNOT NEGLECT INCREASED RESEARCH FACILITIES

That is expert evidence this country cannot neglect. Those increased research facilities should be provided, at whatever cost. I have no interest in their location. All I know is that those facilities should be located at the place where those who are depending upon them want them located. The testimony of the Army, the Navy, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the aviation industry, was unanimous in its agreement with the plans presented by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics calling for the use of the facilities at Sunnyvale, Calif., because those facilities are so close to the tremendous factory capacity in airplanes that has been built up on the West coast in recent years.

With that testimony Colonel Lindbergh agreed heartily. It is proposed to spend $4,000,000 immediately and to authorize the expenditure of $8,000,000 additional for this purpose.

The question I should like to ask at this point is, What is being done about that? Where are the duplications of Langley Field? Where are we erecting them? Or are we failing to do this thing which all our great national experts say should be done?

In this connection I desire to recall that I voted for the 6,000 airplanes for America. I should like to see America in the lead in aviation, as it was at first when two immortal Americans invented this great instrument of travel—the airplane.

Colonel Lindbergh, the man who, through his life's experience and his very up-to-the-minute knowledge of what is going on in the rest of the world, swears to the necessity of such a step.

THE SCIENCE OF AERONAUTICS

The science of aeronautics is perhaps our youngest. The frontiers of that science are almost limitless. It is only through properly guided and coordinated exploration that the frontiers of our knowledge can be pushed into the future of aviation, and in that future, more than in any other, knowledge is power. To fail to acquire that knowledge as the experts tell us we must acquire it, at a cost of $12,000,000 over a period of the next few years, would, indeed, be a betrayal of that spirit of American initiative that has enabled us to be first in commercial flight across the North Atlantic. I refuse to believe that we will fail or permit the leaders of our aviation industry, like those who won the North Atlantic for us, to fail.

I should like to recall at this moment the statements that appeared in the press of this country at the time of the Munich conference. I do no wish to give expression to any alarm or sentiments or to intrude into the quarrels of Europe, but it was reliably reported that it was air power in the hands of one great nation that, so far as that crisis was concerned, proved decisive. In the future it may be well to keep that in mind, as the Congress meets from time to time and year after year, aviation research must not be neglected.

No wonder that company again was ready when the time came to be the first to fly the North Atlantic. It is as seriously concerned with the problem of South America as anyone. Now that its officials can give renewed attention to that problem and if, particularly, it is backed by every applicable energy of its own Government, if American manufacturers continue to cooperate with it and with each other in the study and supply of this important market, I think we need have no fears for the ultimate triumph of American ingenuity and initiative there, or any other place in the world.

THE ATLANTIC VICTORY

A word about the history of this victory in the North Atlantic will, I think, confirm my optimism as to this result. From the moment of Lindbergh's flight in 1927, every nation with interests on either side of the Atlantic has been studying the possibility of its commercial flight. These studies came to a head in 1935. On July 2, in response to inquiries from abroad, President Roosevelt formed an interdepartmental committee with representatives of the State. Treasury, Post Office, and Commerce Departments, to handle the problem of foreign air-line extensions. During succeeding months, conferences were held with the British, Irish, Canadian, French, and German missions which came to this country. The only definite result at that time was the conclusion of an arrangement whereby Pan American Airways agreed with British Imperial Airways that both should commence commercial crossings of the Atlantic at the same time and that each could avail of the home facilities of the

About a year ago, however, the situation changed again. Pan American Airways, by placing with the Boeing Aircraft Co. definite orders for six of the largest and most effective flying boats yet built any place in the world, had put itself, so far as equipment was concerned, far ahead of Imperial Airways or any other competitor. As these great planes approached completion, the British announced that by last spring, before the Boeings could be ready, they intended to link up their so-called empire route by regular flights from London to Montreal.

BRITAIN FOR ONCE OUT-MANEUVERED

Yes; they would faithfully observe the agreement with Pan American and not send their planes into New York before Pan American was ready to send its planes out of New York. But there was a notable reluctance to negotiate the details of Pan American's imminent flights.

Fortunately, almost prophetically, the Congress had made provisions which enabled the United States effectively to meet and counter this diplomatic plan. A year ago Congress united all authority over civil aeronautics in a single independent body responsible only to Congress and the President, the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The President, in pursuance of law, had abolished the interdepartmental committee. The Civil Aeronautics Authority, among whose capable members sat Mr. Harllee Branch, a veteran of the Post Office's handling of air-mail problems, and that same Mr. Grant Mason, who 12 years before had participated in that first little Key West-Habana line of 251 ocean miles, which had grown since 1928 to the 42,000-mile system of Pan American Airways, was able to act directly through the State Department.

The result of that action was a reciprocal agreement with France, providing for commercial air-line services between the two countries. The effect upon London was electric. Within a very few days it was announced that any American air line was quite welcome to land in British home territory, with the proviso only that British lines might later land in the United States with equal frequency.

REWARD, BUT NO MONOPOLY

This, however, is the heaviest transocean traffic in the world. Obviously, it was not in the American tradition to confine this traffic to a single American company. Of the total of trans-Atlantic passenger travel in first and cabin classes by steamship, 47 percent goes to the United Kingdom, 27 percent to France, 11 percent to Germany, and 8 percent to Italy. The remaining 7 percent is divided.

A successful American steamship line, the American Export Steamship Co., had already indicated its desire to supplement its surface transportation by transportation in the air. It had gathered a skilled air personnel, it had ordered experimental airplanes, and it had made studies of the problem, second only to the very extensive surveys that had been made by Pan American Airways.

Under the terms of the international agreements mentioned, six landings a week are available in England and France to American air lines. Very wisely, therefore, the Civil Aeronautics Authority has for the present limited Pan American Airways to two of these frequencies, with the announcement that, if traffic warrants it before an American competitor comes into the field, its number of weekly crossings may be increased to four. The Authority has expressed the determination to preserve at least two of these frequencies for American Export Airlines or any other American company that may apply for them and prove itself capable of using them.

THE BLUE RIBBON OF THE ATLANTIC

But Pan American Airways had already proved its capability; it was ready to go; it has gone on to carry the American flag first through the air on this most valuable of all transocean air lines. Through its long and brilliant achievements on the other oceans of the world, through its accumulation of the most highly skilled personnel, through its development of its own radio facilities and its own technique of flight, through its purchase of these six magnificent new airplanes, and through its attainment of a safety record never remotely approached for its small number of casualties to passengers and crew by any comparable air operation in all the world, it had well earned the right to make this flight first.

Let me say to the Senate in that connection that these great clippers of the ocean are of 41 tons, 82,000 pounds. Within them there is an ample walk 80 feet in length, a promenade. The berths within those clippers are as comfortable as any Pullman. The seats are upholstered and most comfortable and convenient; in fact every facility for comfort that can be found on any de luxe train is found on these very clippers.

REAL SAFETY OVER THE SEA

As has been said before, Pan American pioneered in multimotored airplanes. It has always insisted that its planes be capable of safe flight even though one of its two or three motors fail. Its four-motored ships can complete their assignments in safety if even two of their motors fail. And now a further step has been taken. The clippers which fly the Atlantic are so large and so well-designed that each of their four motors is accessible to an engineer any time in flight. Any one or any two of them can be stopped and repairs, approaching major repairs in character, can be made from within the wing or within the nacelle without interruption to the plane's safe progress in the air, without the necessity of landing on the sea.

Already the possibility of this has been twice proven. On 1 of the 10 or more flights already made with scheduled loads, 1 motor has been stopped, an engineer has stepped through the wing, minor repairs have been completed, and the engine started again. And throughout it all no passenger, even passengers who were experts in the air, perceived, in the huge and comfortable cabins, any slightest variation in the steady flight of the plane.

AIR COMMERCE

Proud as we may be, gentlemen, of the foreknowledge and discretion with which Congress and the executive departments concerned have handled this problem, the final and the greatest glory goes to those courageous, intelligent, patriotic young Americans who 10 years ago first carried the American flag over the seas. By their devotion, by their technical skill, by the knowledge of the world in which they moved, they have proved themselves worthy successors to the masters of the clipper ships of other days who by their skill in construction, by the knowingness and courage of their seamanship, made the Stars and Stripes known and respected in every harbor of the world which our trade penetrated.

We must have commerce with the rest of the world. I am glad, I think every Member of this House should be glad, I think the people of the United States will be glad and proud and confident that our air commerce, so vastly influential upon all other commerce in this day and age, is in such loyal and such skillful hands.

What does this "blue ribbon of the North Atlantic" mean? Any shipping man can tell you that. The possession of the finest, largest, fastest, and most luxurious liners, even though they are run at heavy loss on their own operation, have invariably produced profits for those who operate them many times their own losses in freight and other profitable services of a less spectacular kind. That is the reason for the Queen Mary, for the Normandie, for the Bremen, the Europa, and the Rex. That is the reason for the Broadway Limited, the Twentieth Century, the Empire Builder, the Chief, the great de luxe trains of our railroads. They set a fashion—and, rightly or wrongly, trade, profit follows fashion in the world. Already, in the air over the North Atlantic, Pan American Airways has set a fashion and established a vogue. With a year's start it will be difficult, indeed, for any nation to catch up with us.

We hear from time to time of imminent flights across the North Atlantic by the British, the French, or the Germans. I will believe these reports when, as a Member of the Senate, I am able to entertain here in Washington a member of the British Parliament who has flown to this country with the speed and comfort that enabled me last month to enjoy their hospitality on the charming terrace of historic Westminster Hall.

OUR REAL GLORY IS AT HOME

But let us not permit the dazzle of these conquests of the ocean to blind us to the solid achievements and the formidable advance of our civil aviation establishment at home. To do so would be false modesty indeed. I venture here and now to predict that for aviation in this country, this year of 1939 marks the attainment of that industry's majority. No longer is it an infant industry. It now takes its place not only as a vital, an irreplacable element in our national defense, but it has become a public utility serving 3,000,000 of our people annually. To them, to those people who habitually or occasionally make use of the scheduled air lines or of non-scheduled and private airplanes, the airplane is as common a utility as the electric light or the telephone to the people of a city almost as large as Chicago.

TWELVE HUNDRED PASSENGERS IN THE AIR

I do not wish to burden you with statistics. But as I talk to you here and now, as is true for almost every second of the 24 hours of the day and night, about 1,200 people, men, women, and children, are in the air on the scheduled air lines of the United States alone. With them flies from 15 to 20 tons of the United States mail.

It is difficult to give you any kind of an accurate statistical picture of the growth of this great new utility, this soundly flourishing new industry.

The statisticians of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, for instance, are just now completing the study of the year 1938 and its relationship with previous years. But, even as they are setting down the final figures for 1938, the first figures for 1939 make them pale into insignificance.

There were, for instance, 23,000 pilots and 10,000 airplanes licensed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority the first of the year. The 1st of July there were 26,144 pilots and 11,160 airplanes so licensed, an increase for the first 6 months of this year of 13 percent in the case of pilots and of almost 12 percent in the case of airplanes.

SCHEDULED AIR LINES

On the scheduled air lines during the last 90 days a new schedule has been put in operation every day, 90 new services in 3 months. Traffic on the air lines for April was 30 percent ahead of April 1938; it was 40 percent up for May; and while final figures for June are not yet available, the Wall Street Journal predicted on July 6 that the traffic increases for that month were so large that every air line in the United States would show an operating profit for June and that for the first 6 months of 1939 the air line transport industry as a whole would show a profit of $500,000. A half a million dollars profit in that 6 months is a profit of which almost any industry in the United States, large or small, might well be proud.

But let it be remarked here and now, it is a profit derived in the good American way out of service to the American people.

THE AIR LINES OF THE UNITED STATES

The scheduled air lines of the United States fly on routes covering 35,000 miles within the United States and 46,000 miles abroad, a total of 81,000 route-miles.

The airplanes on these routes flew 70,000,000 airplanemiles at home last year and 11,000,000 airplane-miles abroad, a total of 81,000,000 airplane-miles.

They carried 1,536,111 passengers, a total of 635,556,184 passenger-miles.

They carried 23,641,967 ton-miles of mail and 9,452,600 pounds of express.

All of the other principal air lines of the world, excluding Germany for which no official figures are available, maintained about 162,000 route-miles within and without their own countries.

But over this mileage, almost twice our own, all of the air lines of the rest of the world carried less passengers than the United States lines, only a third as much mail, and, while they carried more express, they included in express such items as excess baggage and newspapers which are not counted as express on the American lines.

All other lines carried only about 1,300,000 passengers, 8,000,000 ton-miles of mail, and 33,000,000 pounds of express.

For the 12 months preceding June 1, 1939, the air lines of the United States flew 42,000,000 passenger-miles per passenger fatality.

FIFTY MILLION PASSENGER-MILES WITHOUT A FORCED LANDING

For the winter months of 1939 the three principal transcontinental routes and the principal north-south route flew 50,000,000 passenger-miles without so much as a forced landing

No other air-line operation in the world has ever remotely approached this record of safe performance.

To make but one comparison that comes readily to mind, Pan American Airways in its 10 years of operation, from Hong Kong to Buenos Aires, has lost but 3 of the fine fleets of flying boats it has successively put into service. Our British friends have built and used, in the last 2 years, 39 of the type of flying boat they propose to use on the North Atlantic. Including the Cavalier, which fell this spring between New York and Bermuda, 11 of these flying boats have become total losses either through crashes or fire.

The devotion of the air lines of the United States to safety in flying has paid big dividends in increased patronage. The close connection between the figures on safety and the figures on increased business on the air lines is inescapable. In all business, in all industry, in all economics, in all engineering, there are no two statistical Siamese twins more closely connected than these: safety in the air and increased volume of air traffic.

CONTINUED IMPROVEMENTS

The air lines themselves deserve much credit for this. By their improvements in equipment, by the better training of their personnel both in the air and on the ground, by the development of procedures ministering to safety, the air lines have done much. But, as in all competitive businesses, there have arisen occasions upon which one air line was tempted to take advantage of the misfortunes, or the caution, of another air line. In previous winters, when one air line canceled a schedule on account of adverse weather, for instance, it was not infrequent for another air line along the same route to take a chance, to seek to gain the business of its competitor by attempting to put an airplane through where the competitor had decided against a flight.

So one of the first things that the Civil Aeronautics Authority did last September was to sit down with the operators of the air lines in Chicago and persuade them to adhere rigidly to an agreement whereby if one line canceled a schedule on account of dangerous conditions, no competitor would attempt to make that flight.

Thus, we may well say that the declaration by this Authority governing civil aviation, that it was above all steadily preoccupied with the question of safety, had its influence upon making the great safety record, the fruitful and productive safety record that the air lines made last winter.

SAFETY IN THE AIR

Congress has long been concerned with this question of safety in the air. Back in 1926, when the first act was passed to regulate and encourage civil aviation, the concern of Congress for safety in flight expressed itself in two phases of regulation. It empowered the air bureau in the Department of Commerce to regulate the construction and operation of airplanes in interstate commerce. And it began the construction and maintenance of those aids to navigation through our common air which are so closely analogous to the aids to navigation upon the public waters of the United States, aids to navigation available to all who travel through either common domain.

From year to year, as aviation grew, these aids to navigation proved their worth. Congress has always generously recognized that worth. Quite properly, whenever an accident occurred, due to failure of the aids to navigation, or to their nonexistence in any particular place, Congress generously provided for material that would not fail or for filling in the gaps in the system. This policy has resulted in building up the system of Federal airways, 25,500 miles of radiomarked and lighted paths, a coordinated system of aids to navigation in the air throughout the United States whose completeness and efficiency can nowhere in the world be equaled.

THE FEDERAL AIRWAYS

You cannot see an airway, as you can a highway, or a railway, or a waterway. You may occasionally see the flash of a beacon as you travel along a highway at night. You may see the roofs of buildings marked with signs which can be read from the air. Nevertheless, in addition to all these things, there are 25,500 miles of airways within the United States definitely marked and just as accurate for a skilled pilot to follow as it is for you to keep to the right side of the white stripe in the middle of a broad highway when you drive an automobile.

There are 2,000 beacons on the airways, visible day and night, and spaced at approximately 15 miles from each other.

BEACON EVERY 15 MILES

I might add right here that in the air 15 miles is soon covered; the 15-mile bases do not seem very far apart. The airplane flies from one to the other in a very short space of time. There are 300 emergency landing fields, about 50 miles apart, in addition to the airports.

But those are merely the good-weather aids to navigation. More and more the skilled pilot is flying in bad weather, day and night, and more and more he is flying above the clouds. In such flights, visible guide posts on the ground do him little good. He goes "on instruments," as he says. On those flights only the miracle of modern radio can guide him. And the most modern developments in all radio are now extending their invisible but readily audible fingers over 25,500 miles, the Federal Airways System in the United States. They connect every major center of population. They reach over mountains and deserts and seas where there is no population.

THREE HUNDRED EMERGENCY LANDING FIELDS

They are available not only to the great air lines that ply on regular schedule, but to every pilot whose plane is properly equipped to use them. This includes several thousand planes of the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard, which must regularly move from one place to another in the United States. It includes the 11,000 planes of private flyers who more and more are using their airplanes to get from one place to another, who are equipping their planes with radio and learning how to use it.

LIGHTER-THAN-AIR CRAFT AND HELICOPTERS

Mr. President, I am not going into the matter of the helicopters or the lighter-than-air craft. I have spoken on many occasions in the House of Representatives and in the Senate about various methods of flight. I will say that recently a small helicopter flew through the main entrance of a great auditorium and over the heads of an audience, and hovered for several minutes over the head of the chairman of that meeting, and then flew out, under perfect control. I repeat that we are just at the dawn, at the very beginning of a new world of travel.

RADIO AND THE AIRWAYS

The radio marking of airways depends upon the transmission of code signals into four sectors rather than in all directions as is generally done in entertainment broadcasting. These sectors resemble a pie cut into four pieces. Into two opposite sectors, or pieces of pie, is transmitted an "N" signal (dash-dot), into the other two opposite sectors an "A" (dot-dash). Within any sector the pilot receives either an N or A, but right along the edges of the sectors (or on the knife cuts) the pilot receives both signals. The N and A signals are staggered so that when the pilot is riding along the edges of the sectors he gets the two signals interlocking so as to form a continuous tone very different from either N or A. In different stations the sizes of the sectors (or pieces of pie) are varied so that their edges (or knife cuts) lie along the airway courses. These are known as the radio range courses, sometimes referred to as the "beams." They are, of course, not as thin as knife cuts, but gradually widen to a breadth of five or six miles a hundred miles away from the transmitting station.

When a pilot passes directly over the transmitting station, he hears nothing. For a moment he is in the "cone of silence" and he knows to within a few yards just where he is.

Mr. President, when have Senators heard of a radio beam failing in recent months or even in recent years? When the system was first inaugurated there were difficulties. Now we are approaching perfection in some matters connected with radio.

RADIO FINGERS COVER THE UNITED STATES

Look at the map and see how completely this system of radio fingers covers the United States. A pilot now can fly from any populous center to any other without ever losing touch with those fingers.

But the magic of these audible markings in the air is not enough. The pilot must know the condition of the air he is to fly into, as well as the direction of his flight. He must know what the weather is to be. Hence, on all these ranges, at regularly specified intervals, through the steady tone of the directional signal will come the voice of the weather broadcaster, with every detail of wind and temperature and visibility which the pilot is about to encounter rising like the words of a song clear above the musical accompaniment of the steady note of the directional beam.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL STATION

Furthermore, and in the same manner, voice communication can be used to and from many of these stations for emergency messages—orders to a pilot, answers to his inquiries. These stations are supplemented by the traffic-control stations of the Civil Aeronautics Authority which at different points throughout the United States assign to each plane entering a busy airway its altitude, its place in relation to every other plane on the airway, and the order in which all of them approach an airport and land upon it.

The information and guidance furnished by these radio stations is further supplemented by the radio stations of the air lines and the traffic-control radios of the major airports.

That is the Federal Airways System as it exists today. Every month it is being extended and improved, not only in the United States but in our island possessions and in Alaska.

SEEING ALASKA BY AIR

If I may diverge from the statement I am making for a moment, when we were on committee business in the Hawaiian Islands in 1935 and 1937, considering the matter of a statehood for the Territory of Hawaii, we members of the committee flew from island to island, where in years gone by the members of the Committee on Territories traveled by boat. These little interisland boats plowed through the waters between the islands and passengers would arrive at their destinations after a long tiring night of travel. Often they were much ill at ease during the voyage. Whereas now one gets into an airplane and flies from one island to another in a very short time, between some of them in 25 or 30 minutes. I think the longest trip between any of the islands is an hour and 10 minutes. I am informed there has never been a forced landing in all the 10 years of flight between these islands.

In Alaska, when I was there on Government business, my good wife and I flew from certain points to others in an airplane in the Alaskan Territory. Alaska is a Territory of such huge dimensions, such a great Territory that it is impossible to see it in a short period of time without traveling through the air.

DEVOTED PUBLIC SERVANTS

It is upon this work that the vast majority of the employees of the Civil Aeronautics Authority are engaged. Three-fourths of its personnel are in the field on this vital safety work. They are maintaining the airways—almost 2,000 are in communications alone. They are testing and inspecting airplanes and airmen.

It has been said on the floor of this Chamber-and I am sure that the unfairness of the criticism was unintentional that this new Authority already has more employees than the Interstate Commerce Commission which regulates all the railroads and bus lines and pipe lines. I regret to say that that criticism has been extensively repeated as coming from this responsible source. So I should like particularly to put into the RECORD a statement to correct as far as possible what I am sure was an unintended injustice to a devoted body of public servants. I am sure the statement was made without proper foundation. It is true that the Authority has a few more employees than the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has more employees because its duties extend far beyond the regulatory sphere of the older body. It must, under the law as Congress enacted it, establish and maintain a far-flung physical plant. To compare it with the Interstate Commerce Commission in personnel it would be necessary to imagine the Commission charged not only with the regulation of the railroads, for instance, but with the design, erection, operation, and maintenance of the entire block-signal and telegraph systems of all of the principal trunk-line railroads of the United States, or with similar concern with all of the lighthouse plants and personnel of our navigable waters, and with the examination of every train as to its safe condition, and every trainman as to his professional competence every 6 months.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Unlike the Interstate Commerce Commission, too, the jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority extends not only to the common carriers of the air, but to all private and military users of the airways. It extends not only to these activities within the United States but to our carriers abroad from Hong Kong to Marseilles and from Point Barrow, Alaska, to Buenos Aires in the Argentine.

There are some 9,000 commercial pilots in the United States, each one of whom must be examined physically and as to his technical skill each 6 months. In addition there are 53,000 private flyers, including student pilots, who must be examined periodically in the same way. There are nearly 12,000 civil aircraft for the safe operating condition of which the inspection services of the Civil Aeronautics Authority are, in the last analysis, responsible. All of these things it has been ordered to do by Congress, and very properly ordered to do.

If they fail to do them, if through any laxity an accident occurs, such as the unfortunate death of United States Senator Bronson Cutting 3 years ago, those laxities are very promptly brought out. After the death of Senator Cutting, in fact, Congress very properly and very generously provided for the extension and improvement of the Federal Airways System and largely increased the inspection responsibilities which the Authority inherited whole from the Bureau of Air Commerce with all of the 2,900 employees engaged in these activities pursuant to law before the Civil Aeronautics Authority was ever created.

SAFE AND USEFUL DEVELOPMENT

That work must be done. If it is not done, if the high standards of safety which have proven so fruitful in the records of the last few years are not maintained, we might just as well give up all thought of the development of civil aeronautics and close up shop entirely. For the only kind of development for civil aeronautics that is worth a penny's expenditure by the Federal Government is its safe and useful development.

And another mistake—a mistake very wide of the mark—was made when it was said that there are more employees in the Civil Aeronautics Authority than there are on the scheduled air lines. As of the 1st of March there were 3,601 persons on its pay rolls. Only 772 of these employees were departmental employees in Washington. The others, 2,829 of them, were the men in the field, operating the radio stations, tending the lights, spending hours of overtime, and flying from point to point on Sundays and holidays to keep up with the ever-growing volume of inspection work. As against those 3,601 employees of the Authority the scheduled air lines alone employ about 14,000. The best estimate is that other branches of the industry employ 40,000 or 50,000 men.

FAITHFUL AND LOYAL SERVANTS

But what I resent, what I resent deeply, in such criticism is the lack of appreciation of what these men on the radio ranges, in the weather stations, and at the emergency landing fields are doing for the safety of human life in the air. Fair weather and foul, they stand by. More than that, it is in foul weather that their services are most needed. The records of the Authority are full of stories of men plowing through snow or flood and darkness and storm to reach their stations on the mountaintops, in the deserts, to repair machines, to see to it that the steady note of the ranges, the periodic reports of the weather, do not fail the pilot when he needs them most.

Well may it be said of these men on the radio ranges and weather stations, the lightkeepers of the air, coast guardsmen on the coasts of infinity, what Herodotus said of those who made possible communication in an ancient day. The Post Office Department has made frequent use of a free translation of the passage. It appears on the facade of the Union Station here in Washington and on the pediment of the main post office on Seventh Avenue in New York, as follows:

Not snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds.

HERODOTUS AND THE COURIERS

That is an admirable tribute to the long-familiar faithfulness of the men in gray who serve the post office. But a scholarly friend of mine recently called to my attention a more literal translation of what Herodotus said. He was discussing, in book VIII, chapter 96, of his work on Urania, the astonishingly swift means of communication in that country. What he said may well serve as a tribute not only to the pilots in the air, our modern messengers, but to these ever-faithful men on the ground who enable them to stay in the air. Literally translated, Herodotus said:

The Persian messengers travel with a velocity which nothing human can equal. * * * Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor darkness are permitted to obstruct their speed.

In this day it is the tenders of the radio beams and weather stations who do not permit the elements to obstruct the speed of their brethren in the air.

SAFETY IN THE AIR

There is ample public reason for the maintenance of this corps of airway keepers. There is reason for their duties in the use our citizenry makes of the ways they guard. Probably 3,000,000 men, women, and children will fly this year of 1939. The concern of government for their safety in the air begins long before they step into the airplane. It begins with almost the first stroke of an airplane designer's pencil on the drawing board.

During the 36 years that men have been building and flying airplanes many designers have made mistakes. But each mistake that could be analyzed avoided other fatal mistakes like it. In the United States all that can be found of that world-wide record of trial and error has been embodied in the civil air regulations. They show the airplane designer what mistakes he must avoid. By mathematical calculation and out of long experience, the regulations lay down the limits of safety for every part of an airplane and its relationship to every other part. The result of following this accumulated experience is that structural failure of airplanes is now relatively rare. When it occurs it is generally the result of the airplane being subjected to conditions for which it was not designed and for which it never should have been used.

Each part must be tested before it is used. Inspectors of the Civil Aeronautics Authority are assigned to all important airplane factories and visit regularly all others. They not only approve design but watch actual construction to see that design and specification are adhered to. Tests must be carried out in their presence. These tests range all the way from the loading of a structural part with sandbags, to determine its breaking point or its yield to stress or pressure, to the actual flying of the finished plane. The inspectors themselves must participate in these test flights, for they are not only skilled engineers but highly skilled pilots.

PRODUCTION AND TESTING OF PLANES

Once, then, an airplane has been produced and tested to meet these exacting requirements, it may be given an approved type certificate under which the manufacturer can turn out replicas. Each individual plane must be examined and tested, however, before the Civil Aeronautics Authority gives it a license certifying it as fit for the task to which, and to which only, it may be assigned.

Once performing that task all repairs and alterations must be approved by an inspector, and, at stated periods, it must be reinspected throughout to see that it has been properly maintained in an airworthy condition.

Presumably then, you have an airplane fit to fly. Next you must have a pilot fit to fly it. Before a student can begin instruction he must pass a stiff medical examination before a doctor designated by the Authority. He must have eight hours of dual instruction—with a qualified instructor in the plane with him—and he must have up to fifty hours total flying before he gets his first license to take passengers in an airplane with him. This is the private pilot's certificate. To earn this he must pass both a written and a flight test with an inspector of the Authority in the plane.

PILOTS AND THE TRAINING OF PILOTS

If he wishes to carry passengers for hire, limited commercial, commercial and air-line pilot ratings are open to him after further hours in the air. A pilot must have had 1,200 hours of certified solo flying before he becomes eligible for air-line rating. To attain each upper grade further and increasingly extensive written and flight tests must be passed with an inspector of the Authority and in the upper grades each pilot certificate must be renewed each six months. Special ratings are provided for instructors and pilots capable of instrument flight, or flight by instrument alone through conditions in which the ground is invisible.

Certificates are likewise required for student, private and commercial glider pilots, upon examinations based upon knowledge of gliding and soaring flight.

Each pilot's certificate, based upon his training and experience, limits him to the type, power, and weight of plane he has proven himself capable of flying.

Of course no inspection service can cover all of the details involved in the certification of airplanes and pilots. So a further system of certification has been set up for those who must look into the details. Upon examination and test, the Authority certificates ground instructors, aircraft mechanics, aircraft engine mechanics, parachute riggers, airport control tower operators, and air-line dispatchers.

Violation of any of the Civil Air Regulations they have shown themselves to know and are supposed to carry out subjects any certificate holder to loss of his certificate and, in some cases, to heavy fines.

WE ADD ECONOMIC SAFETY TO TECHNICAL SAFETY

The economic regulation of air transportation provided for the first time in the statute creating the Civil Aeronautics Authority in 1938 is the mark of that industry's attainment of the status of a public utility, an industry used by and useful to the public as a whole. Having attained that status the public has a direct interest in its soundness and continued usefulness. This phase of the Authority's work naturally is concerned almost exclusively with the scheduled air lines of the United States, including their foreign extensions.

Having determined on the economic regulation of air transportation, Congress directed that no air line be established until its proponents had come before the Authority and proved that there was public business to be done in the territory proposed to be served, and that the proponents were fit, willing, and able to do such business. This is the familiar doctrine of public convenience and necessity applied to other such public utilities as railroads, communications, and power.

AIR RATES UNQUESTIONED

Lines having once been established, Congress instructed the Authority to see to it that rates for passengers and property were just, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory and that the sums the Government itself pays the air lines for the carriage of mail are fair to the Government, the carrier, and the public which both serve.

In applying the doctrine of convenience and necessity to the establishment of the air lines Congress assumed that those lines which had grown up previous to the enactment of this law, largely through the granting of contracts for the carriage of the mail, had proven themselves to be useful to the Government and to the public. Hence it provided that to those lines the Authority should issue certificates of convenience and necessity on the mere showing that they had been operating for a stated period before the effective date of the act and that during that period service had not been inadequate or inefficient. This the Authority has done and has now turned its attention to many applications for the extension of existing lines and for the establishment of new ones.

AMERICAN PLANES OVER ALL SEAS

It has already granted one certificate of convenience and necessity of historic importance. Upon such a certificate, regular mail, passenger, and express service under the American flag is now being carried on across the North Atlantic between the United States and Europe by one American company with another now engaging in survey flights for a second service.

TO EUROPE AND BACK IN 3 DAYS

I had the honor to make that first commercial and mail flight over the North Atlantic, and the flag of that flight is now deposited in Washington. It is the flag that floated in triumph over land and sea and followed the great circle route to Europe and back in 3 short days.

Within the United States some fifty applications are pending for certificates of convenience and necessity covering new routes. If all were granted it would increase the approximately 35,000 miles of scheduled air lines in the United States by about 15,000 miles. Hearings have already begun on these applications. To them come not only the companies seeking to establish the service, but representatives of the communities sought to be served, other communities seeking to be included and, in some instances, representatives of other carriers who believe that their established business would be injured by the authorization of new services or routes.

The certificates of convenience and necessity, however, cannot be construed as exclusive franchises. New services may be established upon proof that existing services do not meet existing or prospective public needs.

All of the carriers now rendering service have filed, as prescribed by law, schedules of all of their rates for the carriage of passengers and property. So far, no complaints have been made, either by the public or by rival companies, as to these rate schedules.

So far as rates are concerned, we know they are being steadily reduced from month to month and year to year, until they are now very reasonable, and, as I understand, no complaints are being made.

RATES FOR THE CARRIAGE OF MAIL

Practically all of the carriers, however, have pending before the Authority proceedings to adjust the rate the Government pays them for the carriage of mail. Two cases have already been decided which lay down the principles upon which the others will be determined. The act itself provides, according to the Authority's first opinion, that the rate must be fairly compensatory and assure the stable economic development of the carrier to meet the needs, not only of the foreign and domestic commerce and the Postal Service of the United States, but also the needs of the national defense. In this case the Authority set a rate which, it said, was such as "to recognize managerial efficiency and to permit benefit therefrom to redound to the carriers, thus providing an incentive to management for further development."

In a subsequent case, however, the Authority severely criticized the financial and fiscal policies of the management of the air line in question and refused to set a rate which, it said, would require the Government to make mail payments to cover the costs of inefficient management or unsound fiscal policy.

Under this application of the statute's formula for establishing mail payments, the Authority has thoroughly investigated the financing, the corporate relationships, the operations, and the management efficiency of all applicants—from their banking costs to their methods and costs of soliciting business. The act provides that the revenues from business other than mail must be taken into account in setting a mail rate that will enable a carrier to operate soundly and develop properly.

ECONOMIC SAFETY AND TECHNICAL SAFETY

Last year, through this measure, Congress very wisely decided to add economic safety to technical safety in its encouragement and development of civil aviation. No longer is it possible to start an air line on blue sky. No longer is it possible to go to the Post Office Department with the boasts of this or that chamber of commerce and the pressure of this or that Member of Congress and demand that an air line be established where there is little more for an air line to serve than the nebulous business of local pride. Now, beyond the shadow of doubt, upon a record proof against review in the courts, the proponents of an air line must prove that business to be done is in existence or within reasonable hope of development and that the proponent is fit, willing, and able to perform the services needed.

Think what this provision in law might have saved us in the development of other utilities. Think of the railroad and other utility securities foisted upon a trusting public by the overhopeful or the underscrupulous in other days. Perhaps some of you gentlemen cherish, too, among your not too happy family inheritances the handsomely engraved securities of some such prospect as the Painted Post, Fancy Prairie, and Pacific Continental Railroad. By the wise action of the Congress in providing for this economic regulation of the growing air-transport industry it has at least been saved from that veritable old man of the sea, the accumulation of overindebtedness which the railroads have inherited from their overoptimistic or underscrupulous days, and which today imperils their usefulness as servants of our national economy.

THE AIR SAFETY BOARD

Though every possible aid to safe flying, technically and economically, be provided in the Federal airways and though every possible precaution be taken in the certification of the aircraft and the airmen permitted to use them, accidents still occur in flying as they do in most other human activities. Why? To answer that very proper question and to prevent, so far as possible, the recurrence of flying accidents, Congress, in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, created the Air Safety Board, within the Civil Aeronautics Authority but in many ways independent of it.

This Board of three members has its own staff of experts. To it is reported every aircraft accident that occurs in the United States or on the lines of American companies operating into foreign territory. Each of those accidents is investigated. A finding on each is reported to the Authority. Wherever necessary, as the result of this investigation and report, recommendations are made to prevent the recurrence of a similar accident. In general, these recommendations call for changes in airplane construction or operation where such change is indicated by the facts of the accident, or for punishment of individuals who may have been responsible, either through suspension or revocation of certificates or through fines. In the first instance the recommendations are carried out by the Authority through changes in the pertinent civil air regulation; in the second instance, penalties are inflicted after notice and hearing before the Authority or its officers.

The Air Safety Board, as the body which investigates, determines causes, and makes recommendations to prevent the recurrence of accidents, is thus, independent of the Authority, the body which manages the safety facilities of the airways, makes the regulations, and is responsible for their enforcement. The Air Safety Board is likewise authorized to make public as it deems best any phase of its work.

PROCEDURE IN TIME OF ACCIDENT

Hence it is that on all accidents of importance, such as those involving airliners carrying passengers, one or more members of the Air Safety Board, with technical and legal experts, proceeds to the scene of the accident at the first possible moment. It is now possible for members of the Board to reach any part of the United States within a few hours. At the scene of the accident the investigation of causes is thus immediately in expert and responsible hands.

Full examination of all records and circumstances surrounding the flight is immediately begun. The airplane involved and the neighborhood of the accident are minutely searched for evidence as to causes. Survivors, if any, and witnesses to the accident are interviewed, and the results of all of these preliminary investigations are promptly recorded in a public hearing. Thus, to a remarkable degree, it has been possible to strip airplane accidents of the mystery that has hitherto surrounded them, no matter how expertly they were investigated, for subsequent study and report.

Full study is nevertheless provided for in the work of the Air Safety Board. All evidence at the public hearings is carefully analyzed; all material which might indicate the failure of any part of the airplane, its power plant, or its controls is submitted to engineering and laboratory examination and the report of the Air Safety Board is subjected to the further scrutiny, and to public hearings if necessary, by the Civil Aeronautics Authority itself before action may be taken. At all times, however, these proceedings are open to all interested parties and to the public, lest the wrong element or the wrong individual be blamed for an accident and lest an unwise change in the regulations be adopted.

The same principles are adhered to in the Air Safety Board's handling of less spectacular accidents. Full examination of all available material is made both by the Air Safety Board's staff and the staff of the Authority. Where private planes only are involved the public interest is obviously less than in the case of accidents to common carriers licensed to serve the public generally. But private accidents are nevertheless carefully studied, both individually to determine blame if any, and statistically to determine dangerous trends of practice that may be altered by amendments to the regulations or otherwise.

Disciplinary measures against pilots, from air-line pilots to students, have already been carried out as a result of investigations by the Air Safety Board. Changes in construction details of several widely used types of airplanes have been brought about. But the members of the Air Safety Board and of the Authority have expressed the belief that, more important than all of this detailed work in the already observable improvement of civil aviation's safety record has been the knowledge of all connected with civil flying that a constant, skillful pressure is being exerted by experts to show beyond doubt that the only way to fly is to know how to fly safely, and to fly no other way.

This steady, intelligent pressure for safety has already borne results. I have cited the magnificent record of the air lines, already so fruitful in the production of new business. I am happy to be able to tell you that already in private flying during these first months of summer, through the first holidays hitherto productive of increased air fatalities, the records show that those fatalities are steadily decreasing, despite the fact that there has been a steady and large increase of flying both on the scheduled air lines and among the private flyers.

And all of this we can credit to moral effect. The real measures taken to increase safety in private flying have not yet even begun to be felt.

PILOT TRAINING AND WHY

The Civil Aeronautics Authority will train 15,000 private pilots between the ages of 18 and 25 in the colleges and universities of the United States during the 1939–40 school year if the Congress makes the appropriation for this purpose it has already authorized.

This flight-training program extends vocational training through Federal aid in the colleges to aviation, just as such aid has long been extended to other practical pursuits. This training will, of course, provide a reservoir of pilots who could be called upon in time of emergency to supplement the trained flying personnel of the Army and Navy. But the primary purpose of the program is its effect on civil aeronautics itself. The first and most important effect will be, it is believed, a very large increase in the safety of flying.

The Authority's method of controlled flight training was given a practical Nation-wide test during the second semester of the 1938–39 school year in 13 colleges. In those colleges 95 percent of the 330 boys qualified for their private pilots' licenses after an average of a little over 35 hours each of flight instruction. There was but a single casualty among the 330 who flew in all 1,300 hours.

This remarkable record of safety is attributed to two requirements in the course: The first is the ground-school course which assures that every student knows what makes an airplane fly before he is ever allowed to touch an airplane. The other is that after a student learns enough to fly a plane unaided to solo, the instructor must be in the plane with the student during one-half of the remaining instruction flights to call his attention to mistakes when they occur and not later on the ground, where the student is with the best intention in the world unable to remember what he did wrong. Thus are prevented those bad flying habits which, all too often, lead to accidents.

The flight training is to be given by established, qualified operators, with the Authority's instructors' rating, on airports adjacent to the college communities. Ground-school training is to be given by members of the college faculty.

TRAINING 15,000 PILOTS

It was considered desirable to select students between the ages of 18 and 25, as the Authority has raised from 16 to 18 the youngest age at which a private pilot's certificate may be granted. While this throws the instruction into the college age group, at least 5 percent of the 15,000 students to be trained under this program will, under the law, not be enrolled in college but must come from outside, as other students come to take other vocational extension courses. It is considered, however, that a high-school education, or its equivalent, will be necessary for any candidate successfully to meet modern flying requirements.

The Authority's plan includes provision for continued training along advanced lines of the best qualified student pilots throughout their college careers, and on an alumni refresher-training basis thereafter, in order that they may be assured of a means to keep up their flying and maintain their value.

Heretofore private flying, in contrast with the safety record of the scheduled air lines, has been marred by a high percentage of accidents, fatal and otherwise. Analysis of that accident record revealed that one particular class of private flyers—those trained in the schools certificated by the Civil Aeronautics Authority and its predecessor, the Bureau of Air Commerce—were not responsible for the high accident rate. They were flying safely. Hence the curricula of those certificated schools, the requirements as to their instructors and equipment, and, above all, the requirement for adequate ground-school instruction and adequate check flying after the student attained the solo stage, were imposed upon the colleges which so successfully went through with the experimental courses this spring. They will be a necessary part of all instruction given in the larger program

From the increase in the general level of safety in private flying consequent on the production of 15,000 pilots, thus safely trained every year, will come a very large increase in the use of private flying. That increased use of private flying will, in turn, result in a very large increase in the productive capacity of airplane and engine plants, in employment, direct and indirect, in a reduction of the costs of airplanes, and in improvement in their performance and safety characteristics. This, in turn, should lead to still wider use of such safer, cheaper planes thus safely flown leading to a development of the entire civil-aviation establishment in the United States to the point where it may well become a vital factor as an important new industry in the reviving economic structure of the country as a whole.

WORLD WAR EXPERIENCE

As such, and only as such, can it serve adequately in the national defense. World War experience showed the perils of an improvised aviation in the high death rate among student pilots who were rushed through their training, in the difficulty of converting other industries to aviation production, and in the delay in bringing our forces to bear. With a civil-aviation industry sufficiently large to meet the peacetime demands indicated by the hundreds of youths who have applied for every available place in the pilot-training program, on the other hand, the United States would have in existence a potential weapon of such importance and of such immediate usability as to be unchallengeable.

No other nation or combination of nations can support such a civil-aviation establishment and no standing army of the air or aviation forced into high production for military uses could continue to meet in the air such resources as those of the United States.

But again and again, let me point out, the American people will only become the customers of aviation on the scheduled air lines or elsewhere, thus permitting it to grow to its true economic stature, if it is a sound product. Hence, again and again, in our student-pilot courses and elsewhere, we must continue to insist that the only way to fly is to know how to fly safely and to fly no other way.

It was with this purpose in view that the Authority chose the colleges which had given some kind of aeronautic instruction and were close to adequate flying facilities as the best places in which this kind of instruction could be given. It was hoped to find boys seriously interested in participating in such a national program rather than merely seeking the thrill of flight. It was hoped that in the colleges these boys would be found habituated to the idea of instruction. And, of course, it was only in the colleges that a group of 15,000 between the ages of 18 and 25 could be found with the time and opportunity to take such instruction.

There has been, however, at no time a disposition to debar from flying or from these courses those whose economic position deprived them of college attendance. Under the law, at least 5 percent of those chosen for the college courses must come from outside the regular enrollment of the colleges. And, of course, all the other ways of learning to fly are open to other than college students. And there can be no discrimination against the noncollege student in the tests which the Authority gives for certification as a private pilot or for certification for any other pilot rating. With the increasing necessity for the use of instruments rather than instinct for successful and safe flying, however, the Authority's examinations for all grades of pilots' certificates have necessarily been increased in scope to include qualifications which very largely depend upon a sound mathematical and general education.

The only cost to a student taking any of these courses provided through the Authority is a fee of not to exceed $40. The first purpose of this is to assure the serious intent of the student. The money is used to defray laboratory and insurance costs.

THE DEMOCRATIC WAY, THE AMERICAN WAY

This, too, I like to think is approaching this problem in the sound, American way. Other countries are creating air power after their own fashion. It but illuminates their fashion to say that it is well-nigh impossible to make any distinction in other countries between civil and military aviation. In many foreign countries manufacturers are ordered to build airplanes, and they are sometimes paid in paper ranging all the way in value from the pure product of the printing press up to promises to pay, for what they are worth, out of future tax receipts. That is nothing but the simple confiscation of capital. Men are assigned under military rules and discipline to work in the airplane factories. That may not be our way but it probably will be our way in time of another world war.

Other nations are devoting to air armament and its supply so large a proportion of fiscal resources as to constitute a heavy tax burden by American standards. Indeed, the development of military aviation abroad has been accomplished largely by sacrificing the crying needs of civil aviation in those countries. England, for instance, has deliberately permitted the lion's share of air transportation between London and the continent to go to non-English lines rather than divert her military productive capacity to the building of modern civilian transports, except those needed for connection with her far-fiung colonies and dominions. Even there, England, in the stress of the emergency at home, has been forced to yield the blue ribbon of all international air transportation, the North Atlantic, to the United States. Because she could not divert military production for the perfection this year of her own flying boats, our Boeings are today alone making the transit between Canada and the mother country, carrying regular loads of passengers, mail, and goods.

The United States, thank God, faces no such dilemma. Its procedure in the development of air power, both civil and military, can be justified by experience dating from our earliest days down to our last unhappy involvement in combat.

A STANDING ARMY OF THE AIR

The development of aviation in every other country in the world can be characterized only as the creation and maintenance of a standing army of the air. Standing armies, in the air or on the ground, are not in the American tradition. From the days of the minutemen at Lexington we have counted upon a citizenry ready to spring to arms rather than upon standing armies. And our citizenry has never failed us.

But it never failed us because it had the arms to spring to. Go back to those men at Lexington. The flintlock was as much a part of their household equipment as the skillet or the plow. They used it to supplement their meager diet by game shot in the woods. Firearms were as familiar to their hands as was the ax. Small wonder then that they were able to turn the flintlock's aim from the wild turkey in the tree to the breasts of the marching Red Coats. That was true as our civilization spread west. The buffalo gun and the Winchester helped feed our fathers on the plains. In hands thus skilled it defended them from hostile Indians and spread our empire to the Pacific. It enabled both sides gallantly and skillfully to fight the war that, for all its fratricide, settled the fate of the Union as one and indivisible.

But the firearm is no longer familiar to our hands. The firearm in hand, in fact, has lost all but its final importance in warfare. The enemy is no longer, in the first place, a foot soldier. The weapons we must have are, in the first place, airplanes. And today less than one-half of 1 percent of our population know how to use them. Had only one-half of 1 percent of the population of the Thirteen Colonies known how to use the flintlock, our Continental Army would have consisted of just 20 men and perhaps a half-dozen women. That is the proportion of men and women in our population today familiar with the handling of this modern weapon, the airplane.

I firmly believe that in the heart of every true American burns faith in the democratic way in which we are approaching this problem. There still burns bright the belief that freemen are their own best masters, that the accumulation of well-being by free choice within the law is more conducive to national welfare than tasks done under the whip of even the most benevolent despotism.

MASS PRODUCTION-FOR PEACE OR WAR

The current growth of civil aviation emboldens me to say that this new weapon, if weapon one day it must be, is now taking a place in our economic life as important as the fiint-lock and the buffalo gun ever held. These scores of thousands of young men and women who are trained to be pilots in the new way, the safe way, the useful way, are not potential targets for enemy planes and antiaircraft cannon. They will be useful, integrated, profitable units in the every-day business of getting rapidly about from place to place in this vast united country which God gave us and our forefathers developed and defended, a country thus so plainly needing this means of rapid transportation through the air for purposes of its own economic, spiritual, and national existence as a unified nation.

We foresee no flow of airplanes from a production line by millions like Fords or Chevrolets or Plymouths. But we can, under these programs for development, definitely foresee the day—it is already upon us—when airplanes will roll from production lines by thousands. When automobiles roll from production lines by thousands, say, like the Packard, the Buick, or the Hudson, even then they come to benefit by all of the economies of mass production.

AVIATION AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

That brings me to this problem's relationship to national defense in the more modern way of which I spoke. Look back for a moment to 1914, 1915, and 1916. The United States then had upon its roads more automobiles than all the rest of the world combined. It had a productive capacity in automobiles that all of the world combined could not match. Now, suppose that the automobile of those days had wings; suppose those automobiles and the capacity to reproduce them had been recognized for weapons capable of spreading destruction far behind the enemy's lines as the airplane is recognized today, would any power, however desperate, have risked our entry into hostilities thus potentially armed, thus actually munitioned?

So I believe we can attain that same impregnability today by the rational development of civil aeronautics in accord with our demonstrated economic needs. Yes; we have imposed Government regulation along with Government encouragement upon that development. But that is nothing new. Economic regulation of industry goes back to the grazing rules for cows upon a New England common, to the sealing of weights and measures in the village store, to the adjudication of business disputes between neighbors by a justice of the peace who knew not only the neighbors but all of the business of each.

Economically we grew so fast that business merely outgrew that homely and effective touch of the law. The cattle on the common became the world-wide packing industry. The village blacksmith became United States Steel. The general store become General Foods. I might even add that the town dramshop became National Distillers. By their very names they boast of the national rather than the village scope of their affairs. Why, then, should they complain today when the place of the village constable and the justice of the peace must be assumed by the Federal inspector and the national tribunals, familiar with their affairs and with their business, which the Federal Government has set up to succeed in this regard the old-time justice of the peace.

AN EXAMPLE TO ALL INDUSTRY

Civil aviation reached that national stage after we had had long and sometimes bitter experience with its elder brothers in industry. But by the wisdom of the legislation Congress has enacted in this field and by the fashion in which this new industry has accepted such legislation and developed under it, it may well set an example for its elder brothers in industry to emulate.

The aviation industry regards the Civil Aeronautics Authority as no Government scold. It regards its actions and decisions as no hamstringing restriction. On the contrary, this industry recognizes the civil-air regulations as sign posts, as traffic guides, as credible signals to keep them from the mistakes others have made. The industry recognizes the economic decisions of the Authority as the friendly but well-informed and disinterested settlement of disputes among themselves which, left unsettled, would lead to all the waste of trade wars, which, in other industries, have cost so high. They have recognized this kind of regulation as the focusing upon their problems of all the information that can be anywhere gathered, its focusing through the only lens free of the distortion of self-interest, the lens of our common Government.

Hence the men in the aviation industry have set another fine example for their elder brothers in trade. They are not the kind of businessmen who sit down and wail that they cannot do business. Their industry has grown continuously these last 10 years when other industries have trembled, weakened, and died, with all the human misery consequent upon a lack of economic intelligence and courage.

Under the wise encouragement and guidance of the Federal Government the aviation industry has manufactured an ever more useful commodity, the great commodity of safe flight. Under the same wise encouragement and guidance it is now going out to sell that commodity to the great American people, and the American people are buying it. Here indeed is an inspiring example for those pale and selfish souls who still say that the only way for American business to progress is along those lines of reckless disregard for the future and for all but their own selfish interests, a policy which helped to bring us to the brink of ruin in 1929.

A STRONG MAN ARMED

And here is more. Here is this new industry, under these conditions of today, growing so fast that it well may one day soon lead even these doubting and trembling citizens out of the depression of their own minds as other new industries, the railroads after the Civil War, the automobile in the first decades of this century, led us out of other depressions.

And more still. Here stands already a civil aviation industry so firmly fixed in the very bone and sinew and veins and communicating nerves of our economic life that it may well make of these United States "a strong man armed who keepeth the peace."

Well may this Senate, well may this Congress, well may this Government, in service to the Nation as a whole through the encouragement and development of civil aviation, guard and guide us to that happy state.

Alfred Lord Tennyson once wrote:

For I dipped into the future, far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonders that would be, Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosles of magic sails, Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales, Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew.

From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks, I wish to insert in the Record statistics showing the progress of civil aviation, from the information and statistical division of the Civil Aeronautics Authority concerning passenger-miles flown, passenger fatalities, the pilots and the personnel, and so forth, the figures as to exports and the total value of the exports, very interesting information, I may say, very up-to-date information, because these statistics were furnished just last Saturday and I have endeavored to secure information as up-to-date as possible so that we might have full and complete information.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Statistics as to the present size of the belligerents' aerial Betaustics as to the present size of the belligerents' aerial fleets are not available, having been suppressed by official censors. Waldemar Kaempffert, in the Review of Reviews, March 1916, states that "there are certainly no fewer than 5,000 airplanes in actual use, and such is the wastage of battle that their flying life is not longer than a fortnight." He estimates that it is necessary to build 50,000 machines a year to repair the ravages of

The United States had 125 airplanes and 3 war balloons on hand January 1, 1917, according to the World Almanac. dirigible was under construction.

That was 1917. In 1915 at San Francisco, Calif., I had my first flight over that great bay and the Golden Gate, nearly 25 years ago. That was in the very infancy of aviation. In 1919 I introduced a draft of the air service bill. which measure gained the early support of that eminent air authority, Brig. Gen. William Mitchell. I hope to continue my interest as long as I live.

I thank the Senate for its attention. I would not have imposed upon the patience of Senators for such a length of time if I did not believe that there is no subject more vital to American defense, American safety, and American commerce, and to the welfare and happiness of the American people, than the subject and science of aviation, which I have endeavored to discuss today.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3409) to amend the act of June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1516), authorizing the extension of the boundaries of the Hot Springs National Park, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills

H. R. 4938. An act to amend the act approved June 26, 1935, entitled "An act to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes"; and H.R. 6479. An act amending section 2857 of the Distilled Spirits Act.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER, DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably House bill 6475, to authorize the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a toll bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1054) thereon. There was some controversy over the bill, but certain amendments to it were finally proposed by the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6475) to authorize the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a toll bridge across the St. Louis River, between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and for other purposes, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments in section 1, on page 2, line 13, after the name "Minnesota" to strike out "a point in"; in section 1, line 14, after the name "Wisconsin" to strike out "as approved, within a reasonable time, by the City Council of the City of Superior, Wis., and"; in section 4, page 5, line 11, after the word "owned", to insert "by the city of Duluth, and shall be"; on page 5, line 12, after "Duluth", to insert "and the city of Superior"; and on page 5, line 20, to insert a new section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. The city of Superior, Douglas County, State of Wisconsin, shall share equally with said city of Duluth in the consideration and determination of questions with respect to the exercise by the city of Duluth of all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon the city of Duluth by the provisions of this act, and none of the rights, powers, and privileges herein conferred shall be exercised by said city of Duluth without the consent and approval of the city of Superior as expressed by resolution of the City Council of the City of Superior.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, to acquire and thereafter operate and maintain either or both of the existing vehicular-toll bridges across the St. Louis River, between St. Louis County in the State of Minnesota and Douglas County in the State of Wisconsin, and should said city be unable, after negotiation, to agree with the owners of the respective bridges upon a mutually satisfactory purchase price, then said city is hereby authorized to require the transfer of such bridge or bridges to said city upon payment of the price or prices computed according to the provisions for public acquisition of the bridges by the respective acts of Congress which authorized the original construction of such bridges.

Sec. 2. In order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the SEC. 2. In order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, said city of Duluth is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, said city of Duluth is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate an additional vehicular-toll bridge and approaches across the St. Louis River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation from St. Louis County in the State of Minnesota to Douglas County in the State of Wisconsin, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act. There is hereby conferred upon said city all rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge or bridges and approaches thereto as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes, or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such property may be located, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

Sec. 3. Said city of Duluth is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over any bridge or bridges acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be such as will pay costs of operation and maintenance and amortize the cost, within the period provided herein, of such bridge or bridges as evidenced by an issue or issues of bonds to pay the cost of such bridge or bridges, which bonds may be so issued subject to and in accordance with the pertinent laws of the State of Minnesota. All such bonds shall be in a form bonds to pay the cost of such bridge or bridges, which bonds may be so issued subject to and in accordance with the pertinent laws of the State of Minnesota. All such bonds shall be in a form not inconsistent with this act, and shall mature at such time or times as the city may determine, not exceeding 20 years from the date of approval of this act. The city, when it deems it to be in the best interests of the city, may issue refunding bonds to repurchase and redeem any outstanding bonds before the maturity thereof: Provided, That the refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 30 years from the date of approval of this act, as the city may determine. An accurate record of the cost of any bridge or bridges and their approaches acquired or constucted, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. After payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment shall have been provided and shall be held for that purpose, the city shall deliver deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance of the interest of the other suitable instruments of conveyance of the interest of the city in and to the bridge or bridges extending between the State of Minnesota and the State of Wisconsin, that part of said bridge or bridges within Minnesota to the State of Minnesota or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereinafter referred to as the "Minnesota interests"), and that part of said bridge or bridges within Wisconsin, to the State of Wisconsin, or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereafter referred to as the "Wisconsin interests"), under the condition that the bridge or bridges shall thereafter be free of tolls and be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by the Minnesota interests and the Wisconsin interests as may be agreed upon; but if the Minnesota interests and the Wisconsin interests fail to accept or are not authorized to accept, their respective portion of said bridge or bridges, then the city may deliver deeds, or other suitable instruments of conveyance of said portions, to any other interest which may accept and may be authorized to accept the same, under the condition that the bridge or bridges shall thereafter be free of toll and be properly maintained, operated and repaired by said interest to properly maintained, operated and repaired by said interest to whom said conveyances are delivered; but if either the Minnesota interests, or the Wisconsin interests, or any other interest hereinabove mentioned shall not be authorized to accept or shall not accept the same under such conditions, then the bridge or bridges accept the same under such conditions, then the bridge or bridges shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the city of Duluth and the city of Superior as a free bridge. The rate or rates of toll for any bridge now or hereafter constructed across the St. Louis River, between St. Louis County in Minnesota and Douglas County in Wisconsin, shall not be reduced below the rate or rates now in effect so long as any bonds of said city of Duluth issued for account of any bridge or reduced below the rate or rates now in effect so long as any bonds of said city of Duluth issued for account of any bridge or bridges acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act may be outstanding, subject, however, to the provisions regulating toll contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

Sec. 5. The city of Superior, Douglas County, State of Wisconsin, shall share equally with said city of Duluth in the consideration and determination of all questions with respect to the exercise by the city of Duluth of all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon the city of Duluth by the provisions of this act, and none of the rights, powers, and privileges herein conferred shall be exercised by said city of Duluth without the consent and approval of the city of Superior, as expressed by resolution of the city council of said city of Superior.

Sec. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, does this bill carry any burden of costs to be borne by the Federal Government?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does not.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the clerk be directed to renumber the sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so

The question is on the engrossment of the amendments, and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement. There has been some controversy between the citizens of Superior and Duluth over this bill, and certain citizens of Superior came to Washington to see if some compromise could not be worked out. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD a telegram which I received under date of July 21, 1939; also two telegrams from Mayor Bryn Ostby, of Superior, Wis.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARRISBURG, PA., July 28, 1939.

Senator Robert M. LA FOLLETTE,

Senato Robert M. La Follette,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

As we were leaving Washington we were advised that Duluth agreed to amendment of bridge bill. The following is the proposed amendment: "Section 5 (new section). The city of Superior, Douglas County, State of Wisconsin, shall share equally with said city of Duluth in the consideration and determination of all questions with respect to the exercise by the city of Duluth of all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon said city of Duluth by the provisions of the act, and none of the rights, powers, and privileges herein conferred shall be exercised by said city of Duluth without the consent and approval of the city of Superior, as expressed by resolution of the city council of said city of Superior."

Also to strike in section 2 amendment providing for designation of location to be approved by Superior, since above amendment gives Superior that power.

gives Superior that power.

Also after Duluth, line 11, page 5, insert "and city of Superior."

H. R. 6475, providing for operation and maintenance of bridge.

We agree to above amendments and consent to passage of bill as so amended.

SUPERIOR, WIS., July 31, 1939.

Senator Robert M. La Follette, Jr.:

Please do not construe any message from me to infer that I oppose constructions of a Superior-Duluth bridge. My only concern is that Superior rights be protected.

BRYN OSTBY, Mayor.

SUPERIOR, WIS., August 1, 1939.

Senator Robert M. La Follette, Jr.: I believe Superior's rights are amply protected in the Superior-I believe Superior's rights are amply process.

Duluth bridge bill. No objections to its passage.

BRYN OSTEY, Mayor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me a very workable compromise has been suggested. As I view it, the rights of the city of Superior are completely protected under the bill; and if there are any controversies existing in the city of Superior over this matter I cannot believe that any better organization could have been chosen to iron out those controversies than the duly constituted city council of that city.

MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM JENKINS WORTH MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably three measures and ask for their present consideration. The first is House Joint Resolution 283.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 283) to establish the Major General William Jenkins Worth Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a permanent memorial to the memory of Maj. Gen. William Jenkins Worth, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESENTATION OF MEDAL TO HOWARD HUGHES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 7089 which I also report favorably from the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7089) to provide for the presentation of a medal to Howard Hughes in recognition of his achievements in advancing the science of aviation, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA (MERRIMAC) - MONITOR COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I also report favorably from the Committee on the Library House Concurrent Resolution 32, establishing a commission to be known as the Virginia (Merrimac)-Monitor Commission, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

PREVENTION OF TRANSPORTATION OF CONTRABAND

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I invite attention to House bill 6556, which passed the House and came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance. An amendment was tendered and reported back, and yesterday the bill was called up for action during the consideration of the calendar, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend] made objection, as there was some slight amendment he desired to offer. I have conferred with the committee and accept the amendment which the Senator has suggested. The Treasury Department is also in harmony with the amendment. I ask that the amendment be agreed to and the bill passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the amendment is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, let the bill be reported by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be reported by

SAFEGUARDS ON STEAMSHIPS

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed two bills to which I wish to call attention. The House has passed similar bills and they are now on the desk. I ask unanimous consent that the House bills be taken up and passed at this time. They are the same as the Senate bills which were passed yesterday, to which I have referred. I ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the consideration of House bill 7090, and that the Senate proceed to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The bill (H. R. 7090) to amend section 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 481).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Committee on Commerce is discharged from the further consideration of House bill 7090.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have examined the bill and conferred with the Senator from North Carolina, and I am satisfied that I should not make objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the vote by which Senate bill 2755 was passed be reconsidered and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

SAFETY ON STEAMERS

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I now ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 7091 and that the Senate proceed to its consideration. It provides for safety on steamers carrying as many as 50 passengers. It is merely a safety measure, amendatory of the statute, similar to a bill which passed the Senate yesterday. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by its title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The bill (H. R. 7091) to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U.S.C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 464).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Committee on Commerce is discharged from the further consideration of House bill 7091.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have examined the bill and conferred with the Senator from North Carolina and I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 2754 was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 928, House bill 6505, the bill contemplating municipal bankruptcy. I do not think there will be any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to have it understood that this will not displace the pending unfinished business.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill to which I have referred without the pending bill being displaced as the business before the Senate, except temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I feel obliged to object to the consideration of the bill at this time. I think that if the Senator will bring it up in the morning, when there is a larger attendance of Senators, after a roll call, he may get his bill considered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears objection.

BARGES "PRARI" AND "PALPA"

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 6664, which is now on the desk.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill be reported by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The bill (H. R. 6664) to admit the American-owned barges Prari and Palpa to American registry and to permit their use in coastwise trade.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not desire to object, but I again state that I will have no objection to the request if the pending business is not to be displaced.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course, Mr. President, I intended to couple such a condition with my original request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the unanimous consent is granted it will not displace the bill in charge of the Senator from South Carolina.

The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 6664) was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of seced., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 883), the barges Prari and Palpa, owned by the Southern Banana Corporation, a Delaware corporation, shall be admitted to American registry, and shall be entitled to engage in the coastwise trade and to transport merchandise between points in the United States, including districts, Territories, and possessions thereof embraced within the coastwise laws.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I wish to say for the information of the Senate that a similar bill has just been reported by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of House bill 6664?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask that the Senate bill identical with the bill just passed be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and the bill is indefinitely postponed.

FISHING COMPACTS

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report favorably Senate Joint Resolution 139, concerning fishing compacts between the States on the Atlantic coast, and I submit a report (No. 1074) thereon.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution be considered, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina want present consideration of the joint resolution which he has just reported?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, Mr. President. The joint resolution has been acted on by the committee and is approved by the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the joint resolution by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) to authorize compacts or agreements between or among the States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean with respect to fishing in the territorial waters and the bays and inlets of the Atlantic Ocean on which such States border, and for other purposes

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make the same request, that the Senator amend his request by the statement that he does not intend to displace the pending business.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am happy to do so. It was my purpose to include that in my original request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) to authorize compacts or agreements between or among the States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean with respect to fishing in the territorial waters and the bays and inlets of the Atlantic Ocean on which such States border, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to any two or more of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida to enter into compacts or agreements not in conflict with any law of the United States, for cooperative effort and mutual assistance for the uniform, common, or mutual regulation of fishing or of any species of fish, mollusks, or crustacea in the territorial waters and bays and inlets of the Atlantic Ocean on which such States horder or to which their juris. lantic Ocean on which such States border or to which their juris-diction otherwise extends and of anadromous fish spawning in the inland waters of those States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT-CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATION OF HAROLD MAURICE KENNEDY

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, yesterday in executive session the nomination of Harold Maurice Kennedy to be United States district attorney for the Eastern District of New York was confirmed. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified at once of the confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the following nominations:

Bert Fish, of Florida, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Egypt, to be also Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Saudi Arabia; and James J. Murphy, Jr., of Pennsylvania, to be a Foreign Service officer of class 3, a consul, and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Edward Gearing Kemp, of Michigan, to be the Assistant to the Attorney General to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Ellen K. Raedy, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia; and Nathan Cayton, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

STATUS OF NOMINATIONS DURING ADJOURNMENT OF SENATE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have stated and adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

That paragraph 6 of the rule XXXVIII be suspended, and that all nominations now on the Executive Calendar of the Senate, or pending before any of the standing committees of the Senate, shall remain in statu quo until the convening of the next regular session of the Congress on January 3, 1940, and that the said nominations shall not be affected by the adjournment of the present session of

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to modify that resolution by having it provide that all such nominations shall remain in statu quo until the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. There are quite a number of nominations of postmasters that have already been approved by Senators from several States, and it seems to me when that has been done there is no reason why-

Mr. BARKLEY. This resolution does not interfere with such nominations. It simply means that when Congress adjourns any nomination not acted upon either in committee or on the calendar shall remain in statu quo.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not understand that.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk again read the resolution. Let me see if I understand it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say that is the usual resolution adopted at the end of the session, so that when for any reason nominations are not confirmed they do not lose their place but remain in statu quo until the next session.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator if that part of the rule to which his resolution is addressed is this which I read:

Nominations neither confirmed nor rejected during the session at which they are made shall not be acted upon at any succeeding which they are made shall not be acted upon at any succeeding session without being again made to the Senate by the President; and if the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than 30 days, all nominations pending and not finally acted upon at the time of taking such adjournment or recess shall be returned by the Secretary to the President, and shall not again be considered unless they shall again be made to the Senate by the President.

Is that the provision?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the rule to which the resolution applies.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not want to be captious about the matter. But let us suppose that at the very end of this session the President should send in a nomination to fill a vacancy which was existing before the present Congress met. The Senate could not act upon it, and under the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, as I understand, that nomination would remain on the calendar for action at the next session of the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would remain on the calendar, or in the committee, if the committee had not acted.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but under the law, if a vacancy occurred prior to the opening of the present session of Congress, and the President did not see fit to fill it, or if he filled it and the nomination was neither acted upon favorably or unfavorably, he would be compelled to make a recess appointment, but I understand the action now proposed would obviate the necessity of a recess appointment.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think so.

Mr. GEORGE. If I am wrong about that-

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so. The President, of course, could proceed and make a recess appointment.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; he can. Mr. BARKLEY. I say he could. Mr. GEORGE. Yes; he can.

Mr. BARKLEY. The resolution simply provides that nominations not acted upon before we adjourn shall remain in statu quo until we meet again. It would not prevent the President from making the recess appointment if he de-

Mr. GEORGE. That is true, but-

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would not the Senator consider it wise to have this particular matter go over until tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to press it now. I will ask that it go over and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I will say that I have no objection if on the expiration of the present session nominations have not come in to fill vacancies that were in existence when Congress met. Under the Constitution if the President desires to fill such vacancies he may do so, but he can do so only in recess after we adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that. I do not think this resolution interferes at all with the President's power in that regard.

Mr. GEORGE. I want that very well understood.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it will give us an opportunity to examine the resolution if it goes over until tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I have no desire to press it now. I will say that it is the resolution which is usually adopted at the end of the session.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before this discussion is closed I will say that I had a personal experience which I think is in point. There was a vacancy. It was not filled. Congress adjourned. A recess appointment was made, and in the succeeding Congress no nomination was sent to the Senate, and the appointee held on regardless of any action of the Senate for 2 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. The resolution, of course, I will say, only applies to nominations that have been made and sent to the Senate and have not been acted on. It has no reference whatever to vacancies.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to suggest to the Senate that if nominations are to be confirmed by and with the consent of the Senate, the Senate should have a definite rule that when a recess appointment is made it must be acted upon at the succeeding session of Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that we have had that question under consideration in the Judiciary Committee with respect to a bill which I introduced.

Mr. SMITH. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. PITTMAN. And we have finally framed a bill which is intended to prevent the character of appointments to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the bill been reported?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have just reported it.

Mr. SMITH. I am glad to hear that, because I was once a victim of that very loose practice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dr. Paul H. Nystrom, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER-NOMINATION REJECTED

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Arthur A. Weng to be postmaster at Daggett, Mich., the nomination having been restored to the calendar, together with an adverse report thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nomination be rejected. The nomination was rejected.

POSTMASTERS-NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that all the other nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters on the calendar, with the exception noted, are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations for promotion in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations for promotion in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar of nominations.

JUDGES OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, two nominations were made by the President 2 days ago and referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, consisting of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] and myself. Those nominations are of Nathan Cayton to be judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia and Ellen K. Raedy to be judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia. The committee acted favorably on both nominations. The nominees are now acting in their respective capacities. There is no objection to them.

I now, from the Committee on the Judiciary, favorably report these nominations, and move that the nominations be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nom-

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Nathan Clayton, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ellen K. Raedy, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

JUDICIARY, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the President has transmitted to the Senate the names of seven persons to fill judicial positions in the Territory of Hawaii. I should state that all but one of those named are now holding judicial positions. Mr. McLaughlin is the one who is not now serving in a judicial capacity. For a number of years he has been serving as an assistant district attorney. He is a man of ability and was recommended by the President. The committee to which the nomination was sent unanimously acted favorably upon his nomination, as well as on the other nominations.

From the Committee on the Judiciary I now report the nominations favorably and ask that they be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Delbert E. Metzger, of Hilo, to be United States district judge for the District of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James L. Coke, of Honolulu, to be chief justice of the Supreme Court, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Emil C. Peters, of Honolulu, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court. Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Albert M. Cristy, to be circuit judge of the first circuit, circuit courts, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Francis M. Brooks, of Honolulu, to be fourth judge of the first circuit, circuit courts, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Daniel H. Case, of Wailuku, to be judge of the second circuit, circuit courts, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Franklin McLaughlin, of Honolulu, to be judge of the fourth circuit, circuit courts, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that all but one of those named for judicial positions have been serving, some of them for several years, and it is important that action be taken as soon as possible upon these nominations, I move that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the scope of the order which was just considered involves all the judges named by the Senator?

Mr. KING. Yes. That includes the two judges in the District of Columbia, Judge Caton and Judge Raedy, as well as the judges for the Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

CONVENTION WITH SWEDEN-DOUBLE TAXATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] referred to a treaty on the calendar, and deferred it until the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] could be present. The Senator from Mississippi has advised me that he has no objection to the ratification of that treaty. If there is no objection to it, we might dispose of it now.

Mr. PITTMAN. If there be no objection, I shall ask that the treaty be considered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator please explain the treaty?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is similar to treaties which exist between other countries. For illustration, Great Britain has an agreement with Sweden with respect to British companies which do business both in Great Britain and Sweden and earn incomes both in Great Britain and Sweden to the effect that the income earned in one country which is taxable in that country may be deducted from income in the other country. That is all.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is that a reciprocal arrangement?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is a reciprocal arrangement with regard to the manner in which each country shall treat companies doing business in both countries.

Mr. AUSTIN. And it is equal in its treatment on both

Mr. PITTMAN. It is equal in its treatment on both sides. Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield. Mr. CONNALLY. Has the Senator from Nevada considered the possibility that since this treaty deals with matters having to do with taxation, that it may have to be ratified by the House of Representatives in order to be valid?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think treaties of such a nature come within the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives present consideration of the convention?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive K (76th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention between the United States of America and Sweden for the avoidance of double taxation and the establishment of rules of reciprocal administrative assistance in the case of income and other taxation, signed at Washington on March 23, 1939, which was read the second time, as follows:

In such case consequent recti-fications may be made in the accounts of the former enterprise.

ARTICLE IV

The United States of America shall, however, deduct the amount of the taxes specified in Article I (b) (1) and (3) of this Convention or other like taxes from the income tax thus computed but not in excess of that portion of the income tax liability which the taxpayer's net income taxable in Sweden bears to his which the taxpayer's net income taxable in Sweden bears to his entire net income.

(2) There shall also be allowed by Sweden from its National income and property tax a deduction offsetting the tax deducted at the source in the United States of America, amounting to not less than 5 per centum of the dividends from within the United States of America and subject to such tax in Sweden. It is agreed that the United States of America shall allow a similar credit against the United States income tax liability of citizens of Sweden residing in the United States of America.

POSTMASTER

MICHIGAN

Arthur A. Weng to be postmaster at Daggett, in the State of Michigan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 2, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Supreme Ruler of the Universe, by whose mercies we are spared and by whose power we are sustained, we thank Thee for this day which has come as a sacred gift from Thy hand, bringing with it tasks worthy of the investment and consecration of our noblest manhood and womanhood.

We pray that there may be nothing in this day's work of which we shall be ashamed when the sun has set or at the eventide of life, when Thou dost call us to Thyself.

Wilt Thou share Thine eternal wisdom with these Thy servants? In all difficult problems give unto them that faith which casts out fear, that hope which never despairs, and that love which lays hold of Him whose resources are inexhaustible.

May we strive to be coworkers with Thee in ushering in that glad and glorious day when humanity's needs shall be supplied and men everywhere shall seek to gather those blessings which none can ever find or enjoy alone.

In the name of the Christ, our Friend and Elder Brother, we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on pending legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. PFEIFER and Mr. MILLS of Arkansas asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a list of individuals and organizations endorsing the housing program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

DEDICATION OF THE 4-COUNTY ELECTRIC POWER ASSOCIATION Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to leave for home this afternoon. On next Friday I am to deliver an address at the dedication of the 4-County Electric Power Association in my district and I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein copies of those proceedings, including my address.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I regret very much I have to leave. I understand he is going to break his long silence tomorrow and address the House for a minute and I am sorry I cannot be here to hear him. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that he made the statement some time ago that the only cost to the Government of inserting matters in the RECORD is the cost of the paper and the ink. I would like to insert in the RECORD a statement from the Public Printer showing that the statement the gentleman made some time ago referred to only a small part of the cost of printing these items. If the gentleman would like to have that put in at this point it would be enlightening.

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection; I am always glad to be enlightened by the silent gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

FARMERS AND THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, when the present administration came into power an expansion of Federal land-bank loans was started and the land-bank commissioner loans were brought into being. This Government promised the farmers that it would save their farms for them. Thousands and thousands of farmers in every State refinanced their farms because of promises made by their Government. The farmers were told, in the newspapers and over the radio, to apply for their loans, and prevent foreclosures, and they were further told that if they could not get their loans through, to write to the President. At the same time farmers were promised and assured that farm prices would be raised, so that they might ultimately save their land.

Farm prices are now at an all-time low. The spread between that which the farmer must pay for the things he buys and what he receives for his products has increased. As farm prices continue to decline, the Federal land bank and the land-bank commissioner are foreclosing upon farm homes by the hundreds and thousands. In one of my counties 10 such foreclosures were filed within 1 week.

This Congress should not adjourn without enacting legislation which will ease the burden of the farmers in their payments on both principal and interest on these loans, which they obligated themselves for upon the representations made by the Government. Deficiency judgments should be abolished in Federal land-bank and commissioner cases. Our benevolent Uncle Sam has become a loan shark.

This Congress should not adjourn until an amendment to the wage and hour law has been enacted to relieve the small telephone companies, agricultural labor, and the processors of agricultural products from compliance with that law. I, for one, am willing to stay here until this, as well as other much-needed legislation, has been enacted. [Applause.]

THE MARINE BAND

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, on July 6 the House Committee on Naval Affairs unanimously reported to the House a bill, H. R. 6942, authorizing the United States Marine Band to proceed to Rye, N. H., to participate in a memorial concert for the benefit of the dependents of the victims of the submarine Squalus disaster, which occurred on May 23 last. On July 13 the House unanimously passed that bill, after which it was referred to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, where, insofar as I am able to ascertain, because of the unfriendliness of the chairman of that committee toward the proposal, it was permitted to languish and

It is difficult for the people of New Hampshire, whose sympathy and concern poured out to the bereaved dependents of the unfortunate victims of the Squalus disaster, to understand the failure of this bill to be enacted into law by a Congress that can so lavishly and extravagantly expend billions of dollars but could not see through to a successful conclusion a measure that involved the expenditure of only $3,100 for a most worthy and deserving cause. The people of New Hampshire are indeed grateful to the chairman, Mr. Vinson, and the members of the House Committee on Naval Affairs and to the Members of this House for their sympathetic and unanimous support of this effort to alleviate the burdens of the dependents of the Squalus victims. That the wishes of the membership of this body were disregarded and this worthy effort thwarted is a matter of deep regret.

FARMERS AND THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Curtis] made a few remarks a moment ago in which he deplored the condition of the farmer and the failure of the administration to help the farmer. I have just consulted the RECORD and find that on a rule which was before the House yesterday to consider a bill about 80 percent of the benefits of the particular measure going to the farmer, the gentleman from Nebraska is recorded as voting against the consideration of the legislation.

Now let us see what the Record discloses. The appropriations made by this Congress since January show we have appropriated $1,206,369,412 for the Department of Agriculture.

I know some say, Do not charge the appropriation for the Weather Bureau or for roads to the farmer. Of course, not all of it should be charged to agriculture, but the RECORD further discloses that we appropriated $300,000,000 more for agriculture than was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Appropriations for agriculture, including roads and the Weather Bureau, today amount to more than it cost to run the entire Government when I first came to Washington.

What did the bill carry yesterday that not only the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Curtis], but all Republicans present, voted against considering? I list the items:

Public roads	$500,000,000
Public Works Administration	350, 000, 000
Railroad equipment	250, 000, 000
Rural electrification	350, 000, 000
Department of Agriculture	400 000 000

The $400,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture was to be used solely for rural-security projects, such as facilities for farm tenants, farm laborers, and sharecroppers, including rural rehabilitation loans, projects for the provision of additional water facilities, and farm-tenant loans, as provided in title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

I realize the bill as reported was not perfect. There were provisions to which I objected, especially the administrative features, and if the measure had been considered I would have endeavored to amend it, but I was willing that the House at least have an opportunity to consider it.

We hear about Congress asserting itself; that Members voted their individual judgment yesterday. Strange the Republicans' judgment in this instance, each and every one voting on the rule, was in accord. Talk about "rubber stamp" Democrats, could it be there were some "rubber stamp" Republicans in evidence yesterday?

How many who voted against considering this bill had read the bill? When the residents of the rural section find out what was in the bill, political fences will suffer, and many of their Representatives will be busy during the vacation period making repairs, if that be possible.

I realize that a number of Democrats joined with the Republicans on this vote. The President did not suffer as a result of the action of the House yesterday, but it was the laboring man, the farmer, and, in fact, the businessman. It cannot be denied that the bill as it came from the committee and the companion bill that passed the Senate is supremely a bill to aid the people of the rural areas, to aid farmers in their fight to hold and stay on their farms, and to secure the benefits of rural electrification. It proposes to accomplish these worldly results in a sound, financial way. There was no appeal to give or grant the money necessary to accomplish these things, but to loan the money in a sound way.

The bill would not only have aided the farmers and the people of rural areas but it would have aided laboring men and business generally by promoting work and the spending of money for the necessities of life.

Do not be fooled, such votes are not destroying President Roosevelt. On the contrary, he gains friends. The masses of the people for whom he has done so much rally to his defense, and that includes the farmers.

Mr. Speaker, a militant minority is a valuable asset in any legislative body—Federal, State, or local—but when that militant minority has but one objective—that of destruction of legislation advanced by the majority, regardless of its provisions—it becomes a menace to good government.

When the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress adjourns, analyze the record, find if you can where the Republican minority has advanced one constructive suggestion for legislation beneficial to recovery as a substitute for the bills the Democrats placed before the Congress.

When I return to my district I will report to my constituents that I have supported the President, as I promised I would do in the campaign of 1938.

CONSTRUCTION AND FINANCING OF SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, now that we have slept over it and tried to think over the matter of yesterday, it is impossible to speak for the rest of you but I think it is a shame, a pity, that 47 members of the Democratic Party should unite with the Republicans to overthrow and defeat the mere bringing out of a Democratic rule to discuss and vote for a measure the whole purpose of which is to really help bring about recovery, so sadly needed; but we must congratulate the Republicans who stood in a firm phalanx and never a solitary one broke ranks. As to those Democrats, if they feel victorious this morning, I shall wait to see how they feel when we come back next January, having then met face to face the people who trusted them with their welfare.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

TO PREVENT PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (S. DOC. NO. 105)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Because there have been so many misrepresentations, some unpremeditated, some deliberate, in regard to the attitude of the executive branch of the Government in relation to Senate bill 1871, "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," and because a number of questions have been raised as to the meaning and application of some of its provisions, I deem it advisable at the time of Executive approval to make certain observations to the Congress of the United States.

The genesis of this legislation lies in the message of the President of January 5, 1939, respecting an additional appropriation for the Works Progress Administration. I said in that message: "It is my belief that improper political practices can be eliminated only by the imposition of rigid statutory regulations and penalties by the Congress, and that this should be done. Such penalties should be imposed not only upon persons within the administrative organization of the Works Progress Administration but also upon outsiders who have in fact in many instances been the principal offenders in this regard. My only reservation in this matter is that no legislation should be enacted which will in any way deprive workers on the Works Progress Administration program of the civil rights to which they are entitled in common with other citizens."

Furthermore, in applying to all employees of the Federal Government (with a few exceptions) the rules to which the civil-service employees have been subject for many years, this measure is in harmony with the policy that I have consistently advocated during all my public life, namely, the wider extension of civil service as opposed to its curtailment.

It is worth noting that nearly all exemptions from the civil service which have been made during the past six years and a half have originated in the Congress itself and not in the Executive.

Furthermore, it is well known that I have consistently advocated the objectives of the present bill. It has been currently suggested that partisan political reasons have entered largely into the passage of the bill, but with this I am not concerned, because it is my hope that if properly administered the measure can be made an effective instrument of good government.

As is usual with all bills passed by the Congress, this bill has been examined on its receipt at the Executive Office by the appropriate departments or agencies, in this case the Attorney General of the United States and the Civil Service Commission.

The Attorney General has advised me that it seems clear that the Federal Government has the power to prescribe as qualifications for its employees that they refrain from taking part in other endeavors which, in the light of common experience, may well consume time and attention required by their duties as public officials. He points out, however, that such qualifications cannot properly preclude Government employees from the exercise of the right of free speech or from their right to exercise the franchise.

The question of constitutionality being resolved in favor of the bill, our next inquiry relates to the exercise and preservation of these rights. It is obvious that the intent of the bill is to follow broadly the provisions of civil-service regulations that have existed for many years in regard to political activities of Federal employees.

It is because I have received and will continue to receive so many queries asking what a Government employee may or may not do that it seems appropriate at the outset to postulate the broad principle that if the bill is administered in accord with its spirit, and if it is in the future administered without abuse, oppression, or groundless fear, it will serve the purpose intended by the Congress.

For example, I have been asked by employees of the Government whether under this law they would lose their positions if they merely attend political meetings. The answer is, of course, no.

I have been asked whether they would lose their positions if they contributed voluntarily to party or individual campaign funds without being solicited. The answer is, of course no.

I have been asked whether they would lose their positions if they should merely express their opinion or preference publicly—orally, by radio, or in writing—without doing so as part of an organized political campaign. The answer is no.

I have been asked if citizens who have received loans from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, from the Farm Credit Administration or its subsidiaries, from the Farm Security Administration, from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other Government lending agencies, would be subject to the terms of this bill. The answer is no.

I have been asked whether farmers receiving farm benefits would be bound by the terms of the bill. Again the answer is no.

I have been asked if Government employees who belong to Young Republican Clubs, Young Democratic Clubs, Civil Service Reform Associations, the League of Women Voters, the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and similar bodies are subject to the penalties of the measure because of mere membership in these organizations. The answer is no.

There will be hundreds of similar questions raised in the actual administration and enforcement of this bill. Such questions will be asked in most cases by individuals in good faith. And it is only fair that they should receive an answer. I am, therefore, asking the Attorney General to take the necessary steps through the new Civil Liberties unit of the Department of Justice in order that the civil rights of every Government employee may be duly protected, and that the element of fear may be removed.

I have been asked if the bill applies to veterans—Civil War, Indian wars, the War with Spain, the World War—retired officers and men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who, though not Government employees, are receiving benefits or pensions of one kind or another. The answer is, of course, no.

I have been asked if the act applies to those who get Government benefits under the Social Security Act in the form of old-age pensions or in the form of unemployment compensation. The answer is no.

Finally, I have been asked various questions relating to the right of a Government employee publicly to answer unwarranted attacks made on him or on his work or on the work of his superiors or on the work of his subordinates, notwithstanding the fact that such attacks or misrepresentations were made for political purposes by newspapers or by individuals as a part of a political campaign.

This raises the interesting question as to whether all Government officials except the President and Vice President, persons in the office of the President, heads and assistant heads of executive departments, and policy-determining officers appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate must remain mute if and when they or the work with which they are concerned is attacked and misrepresented in a political campaign or preliminary thereto.

It will be noted that the language of the bill wholly excludes members or employees of the legislative branch of the Government from its operation.

It can hardly be maintained that it is an American way of doing things to allow newspapers, magazines, radio broadcasters, Members and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, and all kinds of candidates for public office and their friends to make any form of charge, misrepresentation, falsification, or vituperation against the acts of any individual or group of individuals employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government with complete immunity against reply except by a handful of high executive officials. That, I repeat, would be un-American because it would be unfair, and the great mass of Americans like fair play and insist on it. They do not stand for any gag act.

It is, therefore, my considered opinion, in which the Attorney General of the United States joins me, that all Federal employees, from the highest to the lowest, have the right publicly to answer any attack or misrepresentation, provided, of course, they do not make such reply as part of active participation in political campaigns.

The same definition of fair and proper administration of the bill applies to the right of any Government employee, from the highest to the lowest, to give to the public factual information relating to the conduct of Government affairs. To rule otherwise would make it impossible for the people of the United States to learn from those who serve the Government vital, necessary, and interesting facts relating to the manifold activities of the Federal Government. To rule otherwise would give a monopoly, to originate and disseminate information to those who, primarily for political purposes, unfortunately have been given to the spreading of false information. That again is unfair and, therefore, un-American.

It is, I am confident, the purpose of the proponents of this legislation that the new law be thus administered so that the right of free speech will remain even to those who serve their Government; and that the Government itself shall have full right to place all facts in its possession before the public. If some future administration should undertake to administer this legislation to the detriment of these rights, such action would be contrary to the purpose of the act itself and might well infringe the constitutional rights of citizens. I trust that public vigilance will for all time prevent this.

The Attorney General calls my attention to a practical difficulty which should be corrected by additional legislation as soon as possible. For many years there has been an exception to the civil-service regulations whereby employees permanently residing in the District of Columbia or in municipalities adjacent thereto may become candidates for or hold municipal office in their municipalities. This and a few similar exceptions should, I believe, be maintained.

The other question relates to the fact that the bill does not in any way cover the multitude of State and local employees, who greatly outnumber Federal employees and who may continue to take part in elections in which there are candidates for Federal office on the same ballot with candidates for State and local office. It is held by many who have examined the constitutional question that because the Congress, under the Constitution, may maintain the integrity of Federal elections, it has the power to extend the objectives of this bill so as to cover State and local government employees who participate actively in Federal elections. This is at least worth the study of the Congress at its next session and therefore before the next Federal election.

It is because for so many years I have striven in public life and in private life for decency in political campaigns, both on the part of Government servants, of candidates, of newspapers, of corporations, and of individuals that I regard this new legislation as at least a step in the right direction.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1939.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR, 1939

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 7462, Rept. No. 1439) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, in the course of his remarks yesterday the majority leader suggested, with reference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], that the RECORD should show sometimes how the gentleman from Pennsylvania has voted. I have checked up that situation. I find that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] has voted against upward of $15,000,000,000 of needless and useless appropriations which have been passed by the Congress, and that on yesterday he voted against the consideration of another measure to get this country into useless debt-$1,950,000,000. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

FARM RELIEF

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, may I state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] that I cannot agree with him when he terms the pernicious spending bill rejected yesterday by the House as relief for agriculture. will prove to be of great benefit and of real relief to the farmers of this Nation, as well as to all other business and industry in general, to realize that sanity has returned to the Hall of Congress, as evidenced by the action of the House yesterday. As an actual farmer myself, I want to compliment the gentleman from the State of Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], who knows correctly the attitude of the farmer of America, and that attitude, my friends, gathered from direct association with the farmer, and not through roaming the streets of the city of St. Louis. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

LANDS FOR PUBLIC PARK IN THE STATE OF NEVADA

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain land to the State of Nevada to be used for the purposes of a public park and recreational site and other public purposes.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 24, after the word "for", insert "national recreational area or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Scrucham: On page 5, after line 5, insert: "Or if there be a repeal, with no reenactment within 90 days, of the resolution of the Board of County Commissioners of Clark County, Nev., dated August 1, 1939, made in consideration of the passage of this bill, and which forbids gambling and the sale of liquor within the confines of the proposed State park or within a radius of 6 miles of the boundaries thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KENNESAW MOUNTAIN NATIONAL MEMORIAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4938) to amend the act approved June 26, 1935, entitled "An act to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes," with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, lines 8 and 9, strike out "such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine" and insert "not to exceed the sum of $55,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 2857 OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6479) amending section 2857 of the Distilled Spirits Act, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act amending section 2857 of the Internal Revenue Code."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is this amendment?

Mr. BUCK. It merely corrects the title of the bill. When the bill passed the House as it was introduced it referred to the old Distilled Spirits Act. The Distilled Spirits Act has been incorporated in the Internal Revenue Act. This merely clarifies that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOT SPRINGS NATIONAL PARK, ARK.

Mr. Derouen. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3409) authorizing the extension of the boundaries of the Hot Springs National Park, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out "used" and insert "appropriated a sum." Page 2, line 2, strike out all after "$8,000" down to and including "Park" in line 5.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the Record by including therein an article appearing in Collier's Weekly by ex-Attorney General Homer Cummings about Alcatraz.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

THIRD DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7462) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate extend for 2 hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] and myself.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7462), the third deficiency bill of 1939, with Mr. Cooper in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is the third and last deficiency bill. The Budget estimates for the items sent to us for consideration amounted to $215,891,168.40 of direct appropriations and to $88,271,500 of contractual obligations. The committee reduced the estimates of appropriations from $215,000,000 plus to $53,190,056. That is a pretty drastic reduction, but it is a timely reduction.

The record as it stands today, exclusive of the present bill, is that we have appropriated something like $300,000,000 in excess of Budget estimates. We might as well face the realities of such a situation. When Members of Congress go back to their districts they cannot point to or blame the present chaotic condition of our finances upon a spend-thrift executive branch of the Government. Practically all of this very large and unprecedented appropriation above Budget estimates is because of our appropriation of unbudgeted items for agriculture. It is a bad record so far as Congress is concerned. I do not chide anybody; I make no complaint about the action of anybody, but facts are facts, and I say to those who are inclined to brush aside lightly the periodic outbursts of demands for Budget balancing and Budget financing that this record ought to cause them to stop and think.

In framing this deficiency bill we have eliminated from it every item that did not fall within two categories: First, pure deficiency items, that is, items to supply legitimate deficits in the activities of the departments for 1939 or prior fiscal years; or, secondly, items in the nature of emergencies that it appeared should not be made to await the consideration of the particular subcommittees having jurisdiction. In following out this policy we have had to leave out of the bill a great many things that on their faces had merit. Many of them had Budget support; many of them had engaged the very active and enthusiastic interest of our colleagues individually and collectively. It is not an easy thing to have to deny a colleague an item in a bill for which the Budget has presented an estimate. It places us in a difficult position, but we believe that it is orderly procedure, and we believe that it is in the interest of orderly appropriating procedure to require such items to go to the subcommittees that have jurisdiction of them when that course appears reasonable and practicable.

If you will follow the report, I shall now advert to just a few matters in which there appears to be some considerable interest.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, would it interrupt the gentleman to yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, the increases over the Budget estimates to which the gentleman refers all originated in another body; they did not originate in this body. Is not that true?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is true; but I say to my friend that I cannot take a great deal of consolation from that because those items came back to this body and this body deliberately accepted the judgment, good or bad, of another body.

Mr. COCHRAN. If they had not been added by the other body we could not have accepted them.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We are particeps criminis. We have shown in the last 24 hours that we are able to use our own independent judgment when we have a mind to [applause], and I regret that we did not stand on some of these other things as we have stood on certain things.

One of the items that the committee eliminated from this bill was an item dealing with personnel supervision and management in various Federal agencies. The Budget estimate came to us as a result of the Executive order of the President of June 24, 1938, setting up a Council of Personnel Administration and various procedures having the very laudable objective of trying to coordinate and organize personnel management in various Government departments.

The committee agreed with the laudable purposes, but regretted the fact that every department had to come and ask for more money and more personnel. We felt it would have been a fine evidence of a sincere purpose to economize through the coordination of personnel activities if these departments could have handled this personnel management problem without coming to the Congress and asking for additional personnel and additional funds.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. May I ask the gentleman whether the estimates which were eliminated had anything to do with the setting up of these personnel offices in the various departments?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is what it was, I may say to the gentleman. The estimates were for that purpose.

Mr. RAMSPECK. They will not have the money to set up the personnel offices in the various departments?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They will not have it if they take the position that they have to come to the Congress every time there is some little change made. I may say to the gentleman that an institution like the Post Office Department, with 700,000 people on its pay roll, could not find 25 or 30 people to carry out its personnel management program without coming to the Congress and asking for additional funds. A great institution like the Department of Agriculture, with its millions of dollars that we have appropriated for personnel, had to come and ask for a few thousand dollars for additional jobs and additional personnel to set up personnel management. It was not an impressive picture, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I gather, then, it is the opinion of the committee they can carry on and set up these personnel officers with the funds already available?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We think so and we think also that efficiency in government service that does not mean economy is not efficiency. There is not a governmental agency involved in here, and every Member of the House knows this is true, that could not find places where it could rearrange and coordinate its activities so that it could divert a little of its funds to personnel management, if it were necessary to do so. It is fair to say, however, that in order for them to do that on a permanent basis perhaps it will take legislation permitting them to withdraw personnel and use it for another purpose or to give approval to personnel reassigned. The latter, of course, can be done by the committee. The Committee on Appropriations felt that with the provision of some funds for the Council of Personnel Administration the program could be further studied and to some extent developed, and they can come back to the regular subcommittees at the next session and the proposition then can be worked out. We were sympathetic with the objective sought to be attained.

The only Budget estimate before the committee for civilian pilot training program was $7,300,000. This was presented before the recently enacted legislation upon the subject, which authorizes an appropriation of $5,675,000. Instead of $5,675,000, we recommend $3,000,000. This being a new program, we thought it could proceed a little slower and that perhaps they could do a better job if they did not have too much money to spend at one time.

About a week before we closed our hearings a Budget estimate came up calling for the appropriation of a million dollars for an extension for 2 additional years of the programs for the construction of public buildings outside of the District of Columbia, which involved the further appropriation, ultimately, of $49,000,000. There are two reasons why this proposition is not included in the bill.

In the first place, it is not a deficiency, nor may it be said to be urgent. In the second place, it is not authorized by law.

Our committee, it is true, has reported building programs in the past, but always, when it has, its action has met with the specific approval of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. This item came to us just a few days before we finished our hearings on the bill, about a week or 10 days ago, I should say. The distinguished gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, is now in a foreign land on an official mission. There was no opportunity to get consideration by the legislative committee. In any event, if the item had been put in this bill, it would be subject to a point of order, and the committee felt the matter should go over to the regular session for the consideration of the proper committee.

The Department of Labor had a Budget estimate submitted for an additional $2,000,000 for wage and hour personnel. The committee did not allow this. The appropriation for this activity for 1939 was $1,250,000 and for 1940 we have heretofore provided $2,546,200—more than double the previous appropriation. We felt that was a sufficient expansion of this activity for 1940 for the present, at least, and that certainly, if it were not sufficient, it would be time enough to consider the matter when we came back in January. Therefore, that item was not included.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman knows, of course, that cutting out this deficiency item is going to cripple the Wage and Hour Administration. Does the gentleman intend to do by indirection what the committee would not dare do by direct action?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, I do not agree with the premise of the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey that it will cripple that Division. Congress has given it twice as much for 1940 as it had for 1939. We are now only I month in the new fiscal year and the committee felt that before we revised our appropriation for 1940 for the Wage and Hour Division, this agency should try to see how it can get along on its present appropriation, and, if necessary, come back and ask for a deficiency in January, next year, if it needs it.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a fact that the Administrator appeared before the gentleman's committee and said it would be utterly impossible to get along without this additional amount of money?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey that every appropriation which comes before our committee is backed up by the enthusiastic support of the department involved, which always says it is impossible to get along without more funds, and that it is the most important activity of the Government. That, of course, is the prelude to every request for an appropriation.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a very unusual thing to completely cut out an appropriation supported by the Budget and evidence as strong as was offered in this case?

and evidence as strong as was offered in this case?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This bill originally called for over $200,000,000, and we have cut out $150,000,000 from other parts of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Does not the gentleman know, and if he does not, I may say for his benefit and that of the Members of the House, that it will cripple the administration of the Wage and Hour Division?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not agree with the gentlewoman that it will completely cripple that Division. I ask the Members to look at the hearings and they will see that a very large and substantial increase was given to the Wage and Hour Division in the regular bill, which became effective on July 1 of this year.

effective on July 1 of this year.

There is no reason at all why the Wage and Hour Division cannot go ahead with its program, and if we have not provided enough money for 1940 we shall be here in January and they can come as every other department does and bring in a request for additional funds.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is it not true that we gave the Wage and Hour Division $800,000 in the first deficiency bill in January, and that all of the money now requested is for the appointment of new personnel; 150 inspectors a month they want to put on for the next 12 months. This action will not impair anything they have. They want to control the world.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman that there have never been as many offenses committed against any other law as against this law. Because of that it was necessary to employ a great many more people than the Administrator anticipated would be necessary to protect the act and protect those who were living up to the provisions of the act. I believe that is what has changed the whole picture and made it necessary to ask for a larger appropriation. In fact, many persons opposed to the law have been advising that it is not necessary to pay any attention to this law. Later I shall have something to say about that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman referred to House Document No. 419. Is that an authorization?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman I do not recall what House Document No. 419 is.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman in interrogating Mr. Andrews on page 274 of the hearings stated:

We have before us several items in House Document No. 419.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; that is the Budget document which contains the Budget submission of this item.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The Budget document proposed this additional $2,000,000 for the enforcement of the Wage and Hour Act?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; there was a Budget estimate for the $2,000,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Would the gentleman consider putting back in the bill a portion of that amount? Many of the workers have been getting in touch with me about this matter, and they are very much troubled about it. I am wondering if the gentleman would consider putting back in the bill a portion of that item.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that there is no evidence in this record to show that the Wage and Hour Division cannot go ahead with their program on what Congress has already appropriated for 1940. I think they should endeavor to do that, and come back, if necessary, if they find they are crippled. I do not believe we should make an appropriation for 1940 and before it even goes into effect come back and more than double it just on the say-so of the departmental heads. Nobody wishes to kill the wage and hour law by starving its administration—I certainly do not, and I do not believe the committee does—but we do not wish to get emotional about this and just dump money into their laps that they cannot use in an orderly and regular manner. If the gentlewoman will look at the hearings, she will see from the number of new appointments to be made and the number of new employees to be put out into the country-150 a month—that is a terrific undertaking that they are suggesting with this appropriation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If I should bring the gentleman additional information, would the gentleman consider such action?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not advise changing the committee's action, I may say to the gentlewoman.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. On page 10 there is an item of appropriation for the location of a national aeronautical research laboratory. On May 18 I introduced a bill asking an appropriation of $10,000,000 to have one of these laboratories located in Wichita, Kans. As the gentleman knows, I appeared before the committee on this matter. I should like to know just what disposition has been made of the question.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The committee allowed the funds and the authority for the additional research laboratory, but provided that the National Advisory Committee should have the right to reconsider the question of where it should be located.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is due to the fact that several Members have introduced a bill providing for other locations?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Several other locations were considered besides Sunnyvale. It simply opens up the question so that the National Advisory Committee can consider other locations.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then is it not necessary for the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics to come in with an estimate of what it will cost actually to construct such a laboratory?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; we have already made that. That item is covered.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I should like to ask a question in regard to the item for the Central Statistical Board. It has just been brought to my attention that $22,900 was the Budget estimate, but no allowance whatever has been made for that. What is the reason?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The reason is that when we passed the reorganization bill we were told that it was for efficiency and economy, and we are going to require these reorganized outfits to live within their appropriations and not come in for more money just because they have been reorganized.

Mr. LEAVY. It is my understanding, however, that due to the taking of the decennial census next year a new responsibility and a new duty has been thrown on this Board.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is what they said, but it was not a very impressive hearing, I may say to the gentleman. We felt that we had given them enough money. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, your Committee on Appropriations has held hearings on the matters referred to in the Budget estimates, and they were considered by the committee for the major portion of a month. The committee have brought in to you the items that were presented to them that they believe are required, as the general rule, to go ahead with the activities of the Government.

There are only two or three items that I, as a member of the minority, feel that I cannot go along with. The first one relates to the purchase of 180,000 reindeer at a cost of $720,000. The promoters of this operation are saying that there should be a purchase of these reindeer by the Government so that the Indians may own all of them. They say that the reindeer are not being properly looked after by the natives and the officials of the Interior Department.

Let me say to you that there has been appropriated by this Congress $75,000 to provide the help necessary to look after this operation. What they need to do if they want to protect these reindeer and provide reindeer that can get along and take care of the Eskimos is to fire all the incompetent help and hire employees who are competent to tell the Indians and Eskimos how to herd their reindeer.

There is absolutely no reason why $75,000 would not be money enough in a single year to teach these people how to exterminate the wolves that they claim are preying upon them.

The second item relates to an item of $100,000 to start a survey of the Nicaraguan Canal; not a canal to carry ships, but a barge canal of 10- or 12-feet depth. This $100,000 is for the survey. This set-up has surveyed for a canal of one type or another off and on for 300 years. Such a survey as this to my mind is ridiculous. It will not be built, in my opinion, by the local government and the Government of the United States has no business going in there and building such a canal under any circumstances; and to start this survey on top of 25 or 30 other surveys that I have evidence of, in a magazine that I have at the desk and shall present when I present an amendment asking to strike this item out, seems to me absolutely ridiculous. We should not get into the spending of money for things that are not feasible or where it is not feasible to get the money and that would not be of any value to the United States, but would be a menace, in a small way, to our financial structure.

These are the only two items I care to discuss at this time. These things, I feel, should be eliminated from the bill. I hope when they are reached and discussed the House will vote to do that very thing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Lambertson].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, the greatest danger to our democracy today is the unbalanced Budget, the spending of more each succeeding year nationally than we take in. There are three places where we must look for the solution of this problem—in the President of the United States, with his power to recommend through his Budget Director; in the House of Representatives, where appropriations are supposed to originate; and in another body which, at the present time, has equal jurisdiction in expenditures.

We will make no comment about the power and influence of the President on expenditures. That is too well known for any amplification. Our House of Congress, coming directly from the people every 2 years and bearing the responsibility of the initiation, has performed its task reasonably well. The situation for saving might be greatly advanced if another body would relinquish the part it has today, confining its activities to other things which they stress first, anyway—all questions of foreign affairs, the confirmation of important public officials.

I propose a constitutional amendment, which I am introducing today which would permit the other body to increase appropriations only when they would be approved by a subsequent vote of the House. I would hasten to say that this is not an attack on the individual members of another body, and in particular I want to extol the public record for economy of the two Senators from my own State. Both men have been Governors and have served the high office with distinction, and both were known for their economy administrations. Neither, however, are members of the appropriating committee of the other body.

This proposal is directly and distinctly in the interests of national economy. This is the problem this Nation has to attack in the near future. If some of my colleagues cannot go along with me in this proposal which may seem drastic, I plead with them to bear with me that at least some of these difficulties might be corrected. There follow a few of the distinct reasons I have to offer:

First. The other body almost invariably increases the appropriations as they leave the House. I am submitting a table here at this point showing what the supply bills of the present session were when they passed the House and how all have been increased as they passed another body.

BIII	Total as passed House	Total as passed Senate

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is the detail of the total in each appropriation bill given?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. For each bill; yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman is doing a real service and I am pleased that the table is put in the RECORD.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I thank the gentleman.

There is a total of over six hundred million between the regular supply bills as they left the one House and then another. A striking example might be found in the rivers and harbors bill, which left the House at $80,000,000 and left another body at $425,000,000. No supply bill was ever reduced after it left the House. This is direct proof that they are not economy-minded.

Second. It is the individual Member's request which dominates the situation there. Over a period of 6 years I have been in three different conferences each year on supply bills. Invariably the argument we meet in conference when we are pressing for the lower figure is that Mr. So-and-so will not stand for that. He will fight us on the floor, and words to that effect. It has been the constant rule that they have accepted our figures as a minimum and then added to it what each individual wanted to a large degree. The situation is intolerable if economy is to be effected and the Budget balanced.

Third. In the new proposal we do away with the abuses of the conference. I can think of some distinct violations of the instructions of the lower House by conferees. This would all be done away with by eliminating the conference.

Fourth. Why should not the House, which is charged under the Constitution with originating revenue, the ways and means of raising taxes, why should not they have more power and the final word on the expenditure of funds? It looks consistent that these should go together, and let me reiterate that another body has functions which are not ours, which they like to stress, and which they can stress more by relinquishing some of this power to appropriate money.

Fifth. To make this constitutional amendment effective and to be fair, we should not permit legislation on appropriation bills in any form in either, then we would not be taking from another body any constitutional provisions outside of spending.

Sixth. Items are sometimes never presented for hearings in a House committee, but are purposely delayed and presented to another body, knowing that they will get a better reception over there.

Seventh. This change would facilitate the business of the session and shorten sessions. It would not be necessary to have two sets of hearings and all the attendant expenses, and would in the sum total of everything be in the interest of economy. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take you for a moment, if I may, to the Niagara River, an international stream, which, I assume, most of you realize, flows from Lake Erie at Buffalo into Lake Ontario at Fort Niagara. Fort Niagara and the village of Youngstown are at the mouth of that river on the American side. For a number of years a vigorous and constructive program has been under way to remove pollution from that stream by sewage treatment. This followed recommendations by the International Boundary Commission, the State of New York, the county of Erie, of which Buffalo is a part, and the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls which have both been cooperating. The cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls have their own modern sewage-disposal plants, which have been built at great expense; and the two last points at the mouth of the river. the village of Youngstown and Fort Niagara, desire the construction of a joint disposal plant at the present time.

Last year the village of Youngstown entered into a loanand-grant proposition with the P. W. A. for the construction of its own sewerage system, and when the Army realized this was under way, they very gladly entered into negotiations with the village of Youngstown with a view to the construction of a joint sewage-disposal plant on the military reservation, because the Army well realized that unless it cooperated with the village of Youngstown it would be necessary for the War Department to bear the entire expense of a separate disposal plant on the military reservation. Following conferences between representatives of the War Department and the authorities at Youngstown, an agreement was reached whereby the War Department will build a joint disposal plant on the reservation and, by way of exchange, offer sewage-disposal facilities to the adjoining village of Youngstown. Under the agreement which has been drawn up and is now pending, the War Department will receive $600 per thousand inhabitants and 60 cents for each additional person over 1,000 as an annual charge for the use and maintenance of the joint disposal plant. In other words, if the War Department does not build this plant under the agreement, it will be obliged to build its own separate plant eventually and would realize no income or share of this expense from the village of Youngstown.

It was my understanding that an item covering this arrangement for the War Department would be in the deficiency bill. I believe it was in the original committee print, and possibly without the committee being fully aware of the situation, it was removed from the bill and is not in the print as it is before us today.

I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks at this point a message to the Speaker of the House from the President of the United States, enclosing a recommendation from the Budget on this item, a part of which reads as follows:

The act approved June 20, 1939 (Public, No. 136, 76th Cong.), authorizes the Secretary of War to construct a sewage-treatment plant on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., and authorizes an appropriation of $60,000 therefor. The act further authorizes the Secretary of War to grant to the village of Youngstown, Niagara County, N. Y., for a term of 50 years, an easement for a right-of-way for a sewer line to be constructed in said village on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation from the village to the sewage-treatment plant to be constructed by the Secretary of War, and provides that the Secretary of War shall contract from time to time for the operating and maintenance of the plant by the village upon such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE Washington, June 23, 1939.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a proposed provision affecting the appropriation of the War Department for "Pay of the Army, 1939."

The details of the proposed provision, the necessity therefor, and the reasons for its submission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget transmitted herewih, with whose comments and observations I concur. Respectfully.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET, Washington, June 22, 1939.

The PRESIDENT

The White House. SIR: I have the honor to submit for your consideration a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation of the War Department, as follows:

"FINANCE DEPARTMENT

"FINANCE DEPARTMENT

"Pay of the Army, 1939: Not to exceed $60,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1939, is hereby made available until June 30, 1940, for the construction and installation of a sewage-treatment plant on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., as authorized by the act of June 20, 1939 (Public, No. 136, 76th Cong.), authorizes the Secretary of War to construct a sewage-treatment plant on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., and authorizes an appropriation of $60,000 therefor. The act further authorizes the Secretary of War to grant to the village of Youngstown, Niagara County, N. Y., for a term of 50 years, an easement for a right-of-way for a sewer line to be constructed by said village on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, from the village to the sewage-treatment plant to be constructed by the Secretary of War, and provides that the Secretary of War shall contract from time to time for the operating and maintenance of the plant by the village upon such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable.

The Legislature of the State of New York has enacted legislation (N. Y. Laws, 1939, ch. 213) as required by section 2 of the act of June 20, 1939.

This project is in furtherance of a general health-improvement program which is being vigorously prosecuted along the entire Niagara frontier for the purpose of ending a serious pollution problem affecting local waterways.

The purpose of the foregoing proposed provision is to make available $60,000 from the appropriation for "Pay of the Army, 1939," to provide the funds necessary for the construction by the War Department of the sewage-treatment plant in question, and this sum can readily be spared from this appropriation.

The submission of the proposed provision is to give effect to legislation enacted since the transmission of the Budget for the fiscal year 1940. I recommend that it be transmitted to Congress. Very respectfully, HAROLD D. SMITH, Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, this would not be an appropriation, it would be simply allocating funds already appropriated for the War Department to this use, and as I have pointed out, it seems to me that it would be a matter of economy to adopt this amendment, for with its adoption the War Department will have the benefit of $600 or more per annum for maintenance.

I quote now from the report of the Secretary of War accompanying the original act of authorization:

The State, county, and city governments in New York State, and the government of Ontario Province, Canada, are cooperating in a general program designed to eliminate the pollution of local water-ways along the Niagara frontier. Sanitary sewage disposal plants have already been installed, or are in process of construction, by the principal New York cities in this area. The village of Youngs-town, situated adjacent to the post of Fort Niagara, proposes the installation of a disposal plant for the joint use of the village and the post.

The proposal is considered advantageous to the War Department as well as the village of Youngstown. If the village should erect its own individual plant, the outfall would be upstream and only a few hundred yards distant from the Fort Niagara water supply intake. Furthermore, it would be only a question of time before demands would be made on the War Department to construct its own disposal plant to prevent contamination of the waters of Niagara River and Lake Ontario. The erection of a joint plant will preclude the necessity for the maintenance of a separate plant by the War Department.

I have discussed this amendment with the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Wood-RUM], and with the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], and am hopeful that the committee will see fit to accept the amendment when we reach page 53, line 8. The amendment, which was in the original print, would read as follows:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Pay of the Army, 1939: Not to exceed $60,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1939, is hereby made available until June 30, 1940, for the construction and installation of a sewage-treatment plant on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., as authorized by the act of June 20, 1939 (Public, No. 136, 76th Cong.).

It was pointed out in the hearings on this matter by Colonel Gregory, of the War Department, in answer to questions asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER! that this item would make available money from the appropriation "Pay of the Army" for this purpose and that the money has already been appropriated and is in an unexpended balance. I trust that the members of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], will see fit to accept this amendment at the proper time.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER.].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, in most respects the bill which now is before us should receive the support of the House. I believe it is in order for the minority to say a word of commendation to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] who is the chairman of the Deficiency Committee that brought the bill to the House. During the course of the hearings one item developed that I think should receive our attention. I refer to the Commodity Credit Corporation. Those of you who have had an opportunity to read the hearings will agree with me, I believe, when I say that the Commodity Credit Corporation exemplifies better than anything else the fallacies that the New Deal has resorted to to try to convey the impression of prosperity to the country. The purpose of the Commodity Credit Corporation is to peg the prices of cotton, corn, and other commodities. The hearings disclose that at the present time the Commodity Credit Corporation is broke.

In other words, it has exhausted its original capital, and in addition thereto, as of March 31 of this year, is $119,000,000 in the hole. The loss already sustained probably cannot be recovered, at least not in the immediate future or as long as the administration persists in creating artificial values. While the losses of the past, which now amount to millions, constituting, as they do, a severe drain on the taxpayers, cannot be reclaimed, we can do our part to prevent further capital impairment and curtail the wild and reckless administrative operations of this Credit Corporation. This loose lending can be halted. Throwing good money after bad can be stopped. Fake prosperity can be frustrated. That can be done by pulling up a checkrein and refusing this outfit more money of the taxpayers to play with.

The only purpose of the Commodity Credit Corporation is to give the farmer a sense of pretended prosperity by pegging the price of cotton, corn, and other commodities. I wonder whether we have not come to the place where common sense is in order, where a full disclosure of the facts should be made, where perfect candor and common honesty will indicate to the farmer and to all the people the artificial type of prosperity that has been sold to them. Pegging prices is only a speculator's paradise.

A very large part of the loss that has been sustained has been the cotton loss. The cotton loss is the result of the agricultural program of the New Deal, just as the losses in every other field of private enterprise are the inevitable sequence of unsound philosophies.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DITTER. Yes. I feel I should. I have challenged the gentleman, and I feel I should yield.

Mr. PACE. Is it not true that the loss of which the gentleman speaks is at this time purely a paper or book loss, and its amount will be determined by the future price of cotton?

Mr. DITTER. I appreciate that contribution from the gentleman, for I had hoped somebody would say that. My reply to the gentleman is that if it were not for this pricepegging theory on the part of the administration, and if the loss would have been taken as of the 31st of March, instead of this loss being a potential and paper loss, it would have been a very real and a very actual loss.

If we continue in this program, if we continue to try to bring about a pretended prosperity, in due time the losses are not going to be paper losses. They are not going to be potential losses, but they are going to be very real and actual losses. We cannot continue to pour in from the taxpayers' pockets their money for the purpose of making good the depreciated capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation, or making good the losses that the Commodity Credit Corporation is bringing about. We should face the facts. It seems to me that we should stop. It seems to me that this is the danger signal. Instead of continuing on this policy that certainly has brought nothing but failure, why not resort to some new tactic that might have at least some measure of hope in it. If the gentleman will suggest that he feels the present prices of hogs and wheat and corn and all these other commodities are satisfactory to the farmer, if he feels that the administration program has brought about a real prosperity for the farmer instead of a pretended and masqueraded prosperity, then I yield further for such observation as the gentleman cares to make. But I warn him now that the administration certainly can boast of nothing but that we are paying a tremendous price for

Mr. PACE. I do want to call to the gentleman's attention the fact that there has been and continues to be a constant rise in the price of cotton. If we can maintain the present level, I do not believe there will be any paper, potential, or other losses on the loans made on cotton.

Mr. DITTER. Now, will the gentleman amplify that further by suggesting as to where the market is to be for this cotton that is already accumulated and that will continue to accumulate? I am sure the gentleman will agree with me that we cannot hope, unless we peg the price such as the gentleman urges, we cannot hope for real prosperity for the cotton farmer, unless we find some place to dispose of his product.

Mr. PACE. I think the market has already acted down on the surplus, and I think, as the surplus is being gradually disposed of, there will be, as is now indicated, a gradual increase in the market price, and I am very happy to announce to the gentleman that I do not believe it is going to be necessary to make any commodity loans on cotton this year.

Mr. DITTER. May I ask the gentleman whether he thinks there is as much substantiality to that hope which he presently holds out as there was substantiality to a great many of the other hopes and promises that we have been ballyhooed with during the last 6 years, not only in the cottonfield but in all of the other domestic and economic fields? The administration is paying the price today for those false hopes and prolific promises.

Mr. PACE. Well, I would not want to measure-

Mr. DITTER. It is only the gentleman's hope, in other words, and hope does spring eternal in the human breast.

Mr. PACE. There is no foundation for it at the present time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me point out to the gentleman in connection with this cotton discussion, that there is approximately 12,000,000 bales under Government loan: that within 90 days there will be a supply of from 20,000,000 to 24,000,00 bales of cotton in this country, at which time the loss, which is now so apparent and called a paper loss, will be a real loss, because we will sit here in this country with about 15,000,000 bales of cotton that we cannot get rid of.

Mr. DITTER. Now, I look upon my distinguished colleague who has offered this observation as a very learned member of the Committee of Agriculture. I can certainly depend upon the observation he has made, born of long experience, more than I possibly could upon that fond hope that my distinguished colleague on the other side presently entertains.

Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. PACE, and Mr. KERR rose.

Mr. DITTER. I had no intention of opening a controversial subject here. I simply want to add this additional word. I do hope that we may bring to the country the thought that artificial things, masquerades, pretended prosperity, call them what you will, are foolish investments—that sooner or later we have to get down to bedrock and to real facts. We cannot continue with any hope whatever unless we face the facts as they are, and tell the American taxpayers that they are paying from their pockets for this pretended prosperity for the farmer.

My distinguished friend from Michigan has been very patient. I must yield to him.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman if the $122,000,000 loss shown on cotton as given to us on page 324 of the committee hearings reflects the $7.50 per bale under the subsidy announced by Secretary Wallace the other day; in other words, if we have, roughly, 12,000,000 bales of cotton on hand and if we are subsidizing exports at the rate of 1½ cents a pound, or $7.50 a bale, I think it is reasonable to assume that subsidies should be considered as a loss, we will say, on the entire crop.

Mr. DITTER. So my friend would suggest that we should add to the loss already reflected by the balance sheet of the Commodity Credit Corporation such grants and subsidies as have been provided.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Approximately $9,000,000.

Mr. DITTER. Making, in all, $200,000,000 instead of $119,000,000 loss. I think the gentleman's observation is sound. I would not, of course, say that that would be in line with the present administration's theory of accounting and bookkeeping.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I think it would not, because as I understand this March 31 proposal it is based on the price which prevails in this country.

Now, let us take up the thought expressed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Pace]. It is true there has been somewhat of an upward reaction in the market in recent days, but if cotton is being subsidized for export at $7.50 a bale I think our present stocks are 12,000,000 bales and the prospective crop is another twelve-million-odd—or we will say 11,000,000—and our consumption is about 6,000,000. Add to the 12,000,000 bales on hand the 11,000,000 that are to be produced, deduct the 6,000,000, and you can figure just what the exports should be; and the question I raise is: Are we to subsidize those total exports at $7.50 per bale, or 1½ cents a pound?

Mr. DITTER. Unfortunately, the discussion has taken a turn that I had not intended. Cotton is not the only commodity that has caused losses. It was to be expected that the administration would offer help to the cotton planter.

I wish to bring my remarks to a close by reminding those who are interested in cotton, those who are interested in corn, those who are interested in these items should not feel that the losses are confined to their interests. After all, peanuts, pecans, and prunes are also within the range of the Commodity Credit Corporation program. It is the philosophy that is wrong, not the commodity. Price-pegging will not make wealth. We are only fooling the farmer. It is only a shot in the arm. We are only putting off the evil day. The New Deal's farm program has been a flat failure and the sooner every American realizes that fact the better off all of us will be. I am convinced that day is at hand, and that those of us who are interested in the real, rather than the artificial, prosperity of the American farmer will receive their commendation and support.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHARMAN The gentleman from Pennsylvania ha

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Casey].

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in this deficiency bill we are now considering we are witnessing an attempt to cripple the Wage and Hour Act. I think that not very many of us are aware that this deficiency bill has struck out the $2,000,000 item requested by the President for enforcement of the wage and hour law. I appreciate full well that the majority of those Democrats who are Democrats because of a liberal philosophy are against this sabotage of the Wage and Hour Act. I also thoroughly appreciate that there is a minority Democratic bloc whose philosophy does not include decent wages and living conditions and upon whom, therefore, I can make no impression by this appeal; and so I want to talk to my colleagues on the Republican side, to those Republicans who believe in labor having certain rights, who believe in decent wages, and who believe in decent working conditions, and ask them when the proper time comes to vote to put back the appropriation for the wage and hour enforcement.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does the gentleman intend to offer an amendment to that effect?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I shall offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I shall be pleased to support it.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman. I know the gentleman from California has always supported such liberal and humane legislation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Gladly.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman realizes that of the funds appropriated for the 1940 operation of this outfit they have filled only about half the jobs and they have a great margin on which to operate?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. My answer to the gentleman from New York who is in accord with the elimination of this item, is that the President recommended $2,000,000, and the Director of the Budget approved it. The Administrator of the wage and hour law is so fearful of what further inroads the Appropriations Committee and the combination of Republicans and the minority bloc of Democrats might make, that they have got to withhold some of these funds in order to continue in existence.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I wonder if my distinguished colleague from New York realizes that the testimony before his committee indicated that there will be 23,000 cases that will have to be enforced?

Does the gentleman from New York want those cases enforced or does he think those cases can be enforced by the deprivation of this $2,000,000 from this agency?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Of course, I doubt if he wants the Wage and House Act enforced.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman if he wants to answer that.

Mr. TABER. Yes; I do. I want to see that act honestly enforced, but I do not want them running around in private houses, as they intend to do, snooping around and annoying individuals who happen to be doing a little job themselves in their private homes.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Of course, the gentleman can reach way down in the bag for reasons to justify his actions, but the fact remains if you do not give the Wage and Hour Division this $2,000,000, it cannot enforce this act. Voting for elimination means that you are against the act. It is better to have it repealed than to leave it without funds to enforce it, because a law that cannot be properly enforced is worse than no law at all.

Employers who believe in the objectives of the wage and hour law are going to try to abide by its rules and regulations, but when you cut off the $2,000,000 and leave that agency without money to enforce its provisions, you are openly inviting the chiseling type of employer to chisel. It is an open invitation to him to violate the provisions of the Wage and Hour Act without fear of detection or prosecution. This is a hardship on the honest employer.

I ask the Republicans on that side who believe that workingmen should have rights and privileges in keeping with the dignity of American citizens and should not be reduced to serfdom, to help us restore the wage and hour appropriation. We believe honest employers should have protection, and I appeal to you Republicans who also believe in that to join with us Democrats in voting for an amendment which will restore the $2,000,000 appropriation asked for by the President and by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. Chairman, the action of the House Appropriations Committee in eliminating from this last deficiency bill the $2,000,000 item for the enforcement of the wage and hour law is a last, underhanded attempt by the dime-an-hour bloc to scuttle the law.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the Associated Press has given publicity to the request of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House for a resolution that would carry an appropriation of $5,000 for the purpose of giving special study to the question of tax-revision legislation between now and the next session of Congress. The question involved is the method by which more taxes may be levied and collected, in order to take care of our mounting deficits.

This session of Congress is about to close. This is probably the last appropriation bill for the present session. I am informed it brings the total appropriations for the year to an all-time high of $13,800,000,000. Of this amount, more than nine and one-half billion dollars is direct appropriation from the United States Treasury, no part of which will be reimbursed. Of the other $4,000,000,000, there may be some reimbursement.

The Ways and Means Committee, being one of the most important committees of Congress, is charged with the responsibility of providing the ways and means by which funds are raised to pay the expenses for the running of our Government. The appropriations Committee, on the other hand, consisting of more than 40 members, brings to the floor the bills providing for the expenditure of Government funds, together with their recommendations. Both committees represent the leadership of Congress.

I have just told you that we have already spent or agreed to spend more than nine and one-half billion dollars. During the last fiscal year the entire amount of revenue raised with which to pay expenses is only five and one-half billion dollars. It occurs to me that the Ways and Means Committee could do a most profitable thing if it would go into a conference with the Appropriations Committee and find out what expenditures should, or should not, be made. There is something manifestly wrong with our financial program when we permit our Government to run a deficit of four and one-half billion dollars in 1 year, and provide no means of paying the deficit except through loans on the credit of our Government.

We become weary in listening to the discussion of figures, but the situation presented this afternoon at the closing days of the session is entitled to have the careful consideration and serious attention of the membership. This Congress is charged with the responsibility of raising and providing for the appropriation of the expenditures in the operation of government. Our national debt is more than $40,000,000,000. I'am informed that by January 1, 1940, it will reach the alltime high of $44,000,000,000. It is time for this Congress to stop, look, and listen. I am not here this afternoon to tell you that all appropriations should not be made, but it is my candid judgment that in view of the situation presented, these committees upon careful consideration, could materially reduce these appropriations. So while this Ways and Means Committee is giving consideration to the question of raising more money and charging it to the taxpayers of this country, it is, in my opinion, far more important that they consider the question of the reduction of expenses. Congress has become so accustomed to the expenditure of funds that belong to the taxpayers of this country that a few million dollars does not appear to make much difference. For example, in the bill before us, we will spend $53,000,000 of our people's money that we are going to have to borrow, and we will do it in less than 2 hours.

I said a moment ago that the $5,000 is to be expended in an effort to find out where additional funds might be procured. After this committee has made a study of the situation, it will come to the same old conclusion that these expenses and these deficits will be paid by the same individuals who have paid them throughout the years. You will not need the $5,000 to find that out. The farmer, the laborer, the home owner, and, above all, the consumer, will continue to bear the increased burden of taxation. Let me suggest again that the Ways and Means Committee and the Appropriations Committee between now and the next session of Congress, should give this situation their most careful thought and study, with a view of giving every item of expense the most careful scrutiny, in an effort to cut expenses in every way and respect possible. The average citizen, the laborer, the farmer, and the consumer have just about as much of a load of taxation as they can possibly carry.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, some people have complained because the Wage and Hour Division has been deprived of $2,000,000. May I say that we have sheets showing the employment of this outfit at the time they appeared before us and the sheets show that approximately 50 percent of the help is employed by that outfit out in the field, and now they claim there are vacancies to the extent of 50 percent of their operations in the field. Does that present a picture where more money ought to be appropriated? They claim 50 percent vacancies in the field at the present time and they want $2,000,000 to build it up.

Mr. Chairman, we should have at least 10 percent common sense when we face this kind of a proposition. We should not run completely hay wire. We ought to use our brains and not be run off our feet by some general statement of one who comes to the deficiency committee and asks for an additional $2,000,000 approximately 2 weeks after the bill for his regular activities has been approved and when he never mentioned the idea of wanting this additional $2,000,000 to the regular committee.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. Of course, this whole field is gigantic and involves a gigantic task. I believe the gentleman will agree with that statement.

Mr. TABER. It is a gigantic field, but if it is not operated intelligently and fairly, it will be a menace to the whole country.

Mr. HEALEY. The Administrator has been going along carefully. He gave the gentleman's committee a very careful survey and filled in all the statistics and figures necessary to bolster up his argument for the extra $2,000,000 that is required. Of course, there are some vacancies now because they have not had an opportunity as yet actually to apply the act and make proper allocations.

Mr. TABER. They have had great opportunity to do it because they have had practically this same amount of funds per month available for 4 or 5 months up to the present time. There is no such thing as their not having had an opportunity to build up if they could possibly have built up so they could get to any such basis as has been suggested. It is just something on which the Congress ought to use its judgment.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. One of the reasons for the

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. One of the reasons for the request for this additional money for agents is the investigation the Wage and Hour Division wants to carry on among the little newspapers of the country, which were exempted by a law passed by the Congress.

Mr. TABER. That is the case where the Administrator has made a regulation that is entirely in violation of the law.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. He has made a regulation that changes the law.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachu-

Mr. HEALEY. I hope the gentleman is not complaining because the men who work on the little newspapers will get 25 cents an hour.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The Congress specifically exempted the small weekly newspapers having a circulation of less than 3.000.

Mr. HEALEY. Of course, the gentleman wants the men employed on such papers to get at least 25 cents an hour.

Mr. TABER. But those workers do get more than 25 cents an hour. The whole situation with regard to those who are trying to annoy business is that they want to force people out of business by improper, unusual, and undesirable restrictions.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If the gentleman will yield further, I wish to say to the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Massachusetts that the men working for the small weekly newspapers get more than the minimum wage, in the average case, but we do not want Government inspectors snooping around those plants when the law specifically exempts small weekly newspapers.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Can the gentleman find a single word in the hearings that indicates that Mr. Andrews or any other member of that Administration intends to do any such snooping? If the gentleman will read the hearings, he will find that this money is necessary to go after the real violators of this law.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I believe they should do that.

Mr. TABER. They have not gone after the real violators of the law, and that is the trouble.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bradley].

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the failure to include in this deficiency appropriation bill an appropriation for the Wage and Hour Division can only be construed in one way—as an attempt to sabotage the enforcement of this act. This is not a sectional proposal. A great many people say there is only one section of the country where this law needs to be enforced. That is not the case. I am going to cite to you a few instances in several States, and you will realize with me that violations of this law are going on throughout the whole country.

In the State of Georgia we have the case of the Camilla Hosiery Mill, which was cited for criminal violation of this act and falsification of its pay rolls. We have the case of the Tufted Bedspread Co., also in Georgia, which is paying as low as 5 and 6 cents an hour. That is the truth—5 and 6 cents an hour. In my city of Philadelphia we have the Crown Trouser Co., which is paying about $7 a week for a 44-hour week.

This is not an appropriation for snooping. The actual facts are that the Wage-Hour Division is 50 to 54 weeks behind in the investigation of actual complaints. They do not have the force to do any snooping. There are only three inspectors for 10 Western States. There are only four inspectors for the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware. There are only two inspectors for the State of Florida, and two for the State of Alabama. In Brooklyn, N. Y., and in the city of New York there are violations by those who are operating cheese factories and those who are operating ice-cream factories. If you want to sabotage the act, pass this appropriation bill without any appropriation for the Wage and Hour Division. If there is any man in this House who believes that 25 cents an hour is too much to pay an American citizen, I should like to see him stand up and say what amount he believes is sufficient for an American citizen to live on. If he believes 10 cents an hour or 15 cents an hour is sufficient, let him have sufficient courage to say on the floor of this House that an American citizen is not entitled to more than 10 or 15 cents an hour.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I wish to state that I agree with the gentleman. In the State of Pennsylvania there are enough violations of this act to require at least 10 inspectors in that State alone.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Why, in the State of Pennsylvania alone there have been 1,300 complaints, and investigation shows that in 781 of those cases violations are indicated.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care what section of the country is considered, this chiseling is going on everywhere, and those who want to obey the law have pleaded with the Department of Labor to have a just enforcement of this act in order that they may be able to compete with those who are trying by every means in their power to evade the provisions of the wage and hour law.

There has been a great deal of discussion on the pending Barden bill. You do not need to vote upon the Barden bill if you want effectively to kill the wage and hour law; all you need to do is to vote for this deficiency appropriation without any provision for the Wage and Hour Division, because that is what it amounts to, in fact; but if you think that an American citizen is entitled to more than 10 or 15 cents an hour you will have to vote conscientiously for an amendment to include the necessary appropriations for the Wage and Hour Division.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. Does not the gentleman think that if Mr. Andrews, instead of being so dictatorial and bothering so much about what this House would do, would spend his time in administering the law as laid down we would not have as much trouble about its enforcement?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. When I hear the views of some of these individuals, I think Mr. Andrews and a great many other people should concern themselves about what a good many people think here, and I think Mr. Andrews should be interested in every amendment that might be suggested to the wage and hour law. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mahon].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I expect to offer an amendment to this bill, which would provide for an additional authorization of $50,000,000, and an appropriation of $1,000,000 to continue the public-buildings program outside the District of Columbia in order that additional post-office buildings may be constructed in eligible districts. I realize that inasmuch as this amendment will be subejct to a point of order, it cannot be passed if a point of order is raised.

The next thing I want to mention to the House, Mr. Chairman, is this: The President sent down an estimate of $119,000,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation, to be used in carrying on the loan program sponsored by the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, did not include this item in this particular bill. The failure of the committee to include this item was, in my judgment, a grave mistake. It was thought that it would be included. Not being on the subcommittee, I did not have an opportunity to learn all the facts in connection with this particular estimate of the Budget for $119,000,000 for the loan program, but I have been advised within the last few hours that if we do not restore this $119,000,000 budget estimate for the Commodity Credit Corporation, the loan program on cotton this fall and the loan program on corn will not be possible.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I cannot yield for the moment.

Whether or not that statement is accurate I do not know, but my information from the Commodity Credit Corporation and indirectly from the Secretary of Agriculture is that we must appropriate about $119,000,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation if we are to carry out the loan program on farm commodities.

There may be room for debate as to the merits of a loan program on agricultural commodities, but that is not the issue involved at this time. The 1938 Farm Act provided, for example, that if cotton fell below 52 percent of parity, a loan was mandatory, and whether that is a good law or a bad law is relatively immaterial at this point, because this loan has been promised the wheat farmer, the corn farmer, the cotton farmer, and others under the law, and if we are to keep faith and be decent about this thing and forestall a serious condition throughout the agricultural belt, it behooves us to appropriate a sufficient amount of money in this bill to take care of that situation, and I am hopeful before this debate is concluded and the bill is read, we will be able to supply the House with concrete, definite, and specific information regarding the gravity of this situation and the specific amount of money that will absolutely be required to carry on the program.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Pace] stated a few moments ago there would be no necessity for additional cotton loans this year on the new crop.

Mr. MAHON. I may say to the gentleman that neither the gentleman from Georgia nor any other gentleman can tell whether or not there will be a need for a loan on cotton this fall. All of us hope there will not be a need, but if we appropriate the money and provide the resources to carry on the loan, we will be doing our duty under the law.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I notice from the hearings there is nothing later than March on this and I am a little in the dark as to how much has been used or committed in wheat loans and how much is needed. It seems to me to establish a program and then through a sniping method to destroy the program, is not very good sense.

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman is correct. As I understand it, as of March 31, $157,000,000 would be available for the Commodity Credit Corporation, but since that time we have had a tremendous amount of wheat harvested and much of it has gone into the loan.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In the meantime there has been a wheat harvest and I would like to know if the Committee has the latest data on the amount of additional funds needed because of such additional commitments. I would like to know what the facts are.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's inquiry is timely, and I hope some member of the subcommittee will answer it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, in looking over the deficiency appropriation bill this morning I was sorely disappointed to find that the deficiency appropriation requested by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Act, and approved by the Budget, had been entirely eliminated from this bill. The request was for $2,000,000 in addition to the amount given to that Agency by the 1940 appropriation bill. I feel sure that Members who have read the hearings on this item will agree that the Administrator has made out a very strong and reasonable showing of the necessity for this additional amount of money.

Perhaps some of the Members are not in full accord with the principles and underlying philosophy of the Wage and Hour Act. However, it became law after a protracted fight in the Congress waged by the proponents of the measure against a determined minority, which employed every possible parliamentary maneuver and procedural stratagem to obstruct and defeat it.

After many months of deliberation and consideration Congress adopted the policy of fixing a minimum wage of 25 cents an hour and a maximum workweek of 44 hours for persons engaged in pursuits that fall within the scope of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution.

A majority of the Members shared the conviction that Congress owed to the masses of the Nation's workers the duty of preserving decent social conditions, establishing and maintaining buying power, protecting the fair employer from the destructive effects of sweatshop competition, and outlawing child labor and sweatshop exploitation of labor. They passed the Wage and Hour Act because they were convinced that it provided the best and soundest method of accomplishing these objectives.

The act is now on the statute books, and we ought to give it a fair chance to prove itself by furnishing its Administrator with the means reasonably necessary for its enforcement. To deny any agency the funds necessary for the attainment of its objectives is the surest way of sabotaging the efficacy of the act whose provisions it was set up to administer. I know that the members of the Committee on Appropriations realize that unless adequate funds are appropriated for the proper enforcement of the act, it would be most unfair to the persons charged with the responsibility of bringing to fulfillment its terms. The Wage and Hour Administration is engaged in a gigantic task, a departure into a new and uncharted field, raising new problems that must be solved without the benefit of past experience. The Administrator has proceeded with caution, care, and discernment in working out a sound system of administration and building up a qualified organization adequate to properly administer the act. Thus far, he has given us every reason for confidence in his policies and has been eminently reasonable in his requests for funds. It is only fair that we should give him the amount he asks since, unless he is allowed sufficient funds to provide a competent and adequate staff, his hands will be tied and he will not have been afforded a just opportunity to properly and effectively ensure to thousands of workers, who are beneficially affected by the terms of the act, the protection it was designed to afford. Nor will he have been granted the facilities necessary to safeguard the decent law-abiding employer from the unethical competition of violators of the act.

I strongly urge the membership to pass the amendment which will be offered to this bill which provides for the appropriation of the additional funds requested by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Act and approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I believe we are dealing here with a question of law enforcement, and that we ought to deal with facts and figures and leave politics aside. We should also leave aside any biased opinions that any one of "the 10-cents-an-hour" Members may have in respect to the wage and hour law. First of all, the figures of the Old-Age Insurance Bureau of the Social Security Board show that there are 354,000 employers who come under this act. The testimony is uncontradicted to the effect that it requires 300,000 man-days for a complete inspection. That requires 1,200 inspectors for a complete inspection. The testimony is also uncontradicted to the effect that in order to reach a tentative goal of 75-percent performance approximately 900 inspectors are required. If your purpose is not to sabotage enforcement then I ask the gentleman in charge of this appropriation bill to explain to this House why in the face of these figures has this appropriation been withheld?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak on this bill, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 4 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to speak out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, shortly our major political parties will be called upon to select their respective candidates for President. The Democratic Party will have served the Nation courageously, effectively, and humanely for a period of 8 years in March of 1941, during one of the most critical eras in our history. We have faced times that have put to test the greatest statesmen this country could bring forward under the progressive leadership of our great humanitarian President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.] Under his able guidance this country has gone forward, step by step, from the brink of a civil war in the early months of 1933 to a point where today we are on the road to a squarer deal for the common man.

In the event circumstances might endanger the security and peace of our Nation, resulting in a call from the people for the continuation of the masterful leadership of President Roosevelt, he could not and would not do less than heed the call.

However, if recovery continues its swing upward and no new economic or other crisis develops, and if no dictum is forthcoming from the people calling for the continued leadership of our great President, then the Democratic Party will be faced with selecting its 1940 candidate for the Presidency.

We are confronted with the task of scanning the horizon in search of a man who possesses the courage, the ability, and the determination to continue the work so forcibly begun and so ably advanced by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Naturally my thoughts center on my home State of Montana, which has produced some of the greatest statesmen in the history of our Nation, notably among them the late, great, never-to-be-forgotten Walsh. Following closely in the footsteps, as a public servant, of that great man comes his lifelong friend, possessing like moral courage, independence, liberal views, and statesmanship, in the person of Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER, a distinguished scholar and a respected leader among men. [Applause.]

This thought has also occurred to many others, and I hold here in my hand a statement by an esteemed colleague, Senator Edwin C. Johnson, of Colorado, marking Senator WHEELER as the "man of the hour."

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point Senator Johnson's statement. It is very brief.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

STATEMENT BY HON. EDWIN C. JOHNSON, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM COLORADO

In another year President Roosevelt's most successful second term will have reached an end. In my opinion, the President at the proper time will firmly and irrevocably refuse to accept the office again, regardless of whatever pressure may be brought to bear upon him to accept the nomination for a third term.

him to accept the nomination for a third term.

The Democratic Party cannot win the election in 1940 with President Roosevelt or anyone else if the present serious internal disruption continues. The party is split wide open at the present time and no one can deny it. Jeffersonian Democrats will not support a candidate with liberal tendencies unless he is also soundly realistic and devoted beyond question to American institutions. Liberals in and out of the party will not support a Democrat who would take a single step backward. The candidate who is all things to all men will not please any faction of the party. The people will not take a pussyfooter or a political hybrid. He must be a man with wellestablished and well-known, deep-seated convictions, and he must have outstanding qualities of leadership.

Fortunately the Democrats have a courageous American to meet this crisis which the party is facing. Burron K. Wheeler is a real liberal whose record for liberalism was made long before 1933 and who is so honest and trustworthy that he holds the respect and confidence of the most conservative Democrat in the land. Progressive, learned, experienced—Senator WHEELER has been a loyal supporter of President Roosevelt, except upon a very few occasions, and then it was a difference as to methods rather than objectives. His whole public career has been a tremendous record of public service. He has a keen, alert mind, coupled with a vigorous and determined aggressiveness, which is so necessary in the Presidency. Senator WHEELER, teamed with a Democrat from the Mississippi Valley or the East, running upon a forward-looking platform, can win the election in 1940 because he is the American who can unite the Democratic Party.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Senator Wheeler would not be satisfactory to John L. Lewis, who has a half-milliondollar mortgage on the Democratic Party, would he?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I cannot say anything about that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Colmer].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I merely rise at this time to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the Appropriations Committee has seen fit to write into this deficiency bill the reindeer appropriation item which this House has cut out on two previous occasions in regular appropriation bills. I assume that somebody connected with this felt perfectly justified in taking this action; but I am not going to have a great deal to say about it at this time. I just merely want to call your attention to the fact that it is in here again for the third time, in spite of the action that the House has taken on two previous occasions. When that point is reached in the bill, of course, an amendment will be offered to strike it, and I hope the House will be prepared to reassert itself on that question.

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I take the floor again for the purpose of trying to clear up, if I can, some of the smoke and dust that has been stirred up over this appropriation for the enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act. I think it is regrettable, when the Appropriations Committee undertakes to make an agency observe the ordinary principles of economy and efficiency and exercise care and precision in the conduct of its affairs that we should be accused of trying to sabotage the activity. That is ridiculous. I personally voted for the Fair Labor Standards Act. I have no doubt many other members of the committee voted for it. But just because it affects labor, or just because something affects the farmer or something else is no reason that I know of why they should not be made to conduct their business under the same rules and principles that we would make any other department of the Government do. [Applause.1

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HEALEY, says the fact that this item is left out is self-evident that we are trying to repeal the Fair Labor Standards Act. Well, that is ridiculous. Mr. Andrews had $1,250,000 for his activity in 1939, the fiscal year ended just a month ago. The committee gave him $3,184,000 for the fiscal year 1940, which began just a month ago, which will enable him greatly to increase his staff. This two million supplementary appropriation comes almost before he gets started on his 1940 program. If anybody wishes to sabotage the Fair Labor Standards Act, certainly the Appropriations Committee, in the regular bill, would not have increased it to $3,184,000 for 1940.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield. Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman mean that the $2,000,000 is in addition to the $3,000,000 already appro-

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, yes; yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Of course, the appropriation last year was just in order to enable them to get started.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, that is a fair statement.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman will admit that that is fair?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. They were just getting started?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is quite a fair statement; but I wish to say to my friend, any activity, no matter how justifiable it may be, can grow only so fast and have a healthy growth. Nothing is worse for a department or agency than to dump a lot of money in its lap which it can just dish out here and there. We found that in W. P. A .- without starting an argument about anything-but just giving that agency so much money.

Now, we wanted the wage and hour outfit to build their organization carefully, thoughtfully, and conservatively.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield right there? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just let me finish my statement, please.

It is shown in these hearings that there are a great many complaints over the operations of this act.

It is true that a great many industries in the country, which are observing the law, which are paying the wages provided in the Fair Labor Standards Act, are very anxious that Mr. Andrews and his outfit have sufficient funds to enforce the act in order to prevent chiseling on them. We are cognizant of these facts. Our committee is for peace and harmony always. Nothing pleases us better than when we can make our colleagues happy and see them smile, and have peace and harmony. So I have consulted among my brethren, and at the proper time we have agreed with the proponents of this amendment that is to be offered, that we shall, for the committee, accept an amendment putting in half of this Budget estimate of $2,000,000, but that if another body, which operates at the other end of the Capitol should tamper with that, our friends over here are going to help us to maintain the position of the House on an additional amount of $1,000,000. It ought to be the attitude of every Member of this House, no matter how interested in an activity he is, to demand that they observe rules of economy and efficiency in their organization, and that is what the Appropriations Committee tried to do.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Does not the gentleman feel that is the fact; is he not satisfied that this wage-hour administration has been very careful and thoughtful?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think Mr. Andrews has tried to do a good job, I may say, without entering into a controversy about the wage-hour bill. He says he wishes these inspectors to go out to find violators of the law in order to protect those people who are observing the law, and I say that is an impressive argument.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. Does not the gentleman know there have been many many more violations of the law than we believed there would be at the time the law was written? Is not that the reason this additional money is requested?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There may have been many violations of the law, but our committee feels we have dealt generously with the Wage and Hour Administration.

Mrs. NORTON. I thank the gentleman for his action although I had hoped we could amend the bill to make it two million. I realize we are confronted with a practical situation; and, speaking for myself and I think for the majority of those who are working with the Committee on Labor, I shall be glad to accept the compromise amendment. I had intended to offer an amendment for the amount recommended by the President and the Budget. I am disappointed but shall keep faith with the committee.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has made good economy record. Does the gentleman favor this $1,000,000 Alaska reindeer pork in this appropriation bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I want to say to my distinguished friend from Wisconsin that a little later I am going to let the distinguished chairman of my committee tell the gentleman about that item in what I believe will be a very convincing way. Our distinguished chairman is an expert on reindeer.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE HOUSE

For expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House, fiscal year 1940, $150,000.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cole of Maryland: Page 3, line 9, after the figures "1940", strike out "$150,000" and insert "$165,000."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in session this morning, authorized an investigation in response to a request from the President of the United States contained in a letter dated July 22, from the President to Chairman DEA. The date of this letter accounts for this request being presented this late in the session. The investigation is for the purpose of bringing up to date the petroleum investigation which the committee conducted in 1934 and which the President specifically asked be conducted before January next, if possible, so that pending legislation might be considered by the Congress during the next session. The committee recommended that $25,000 be provided, but in talking with the gentleman from North Carolina and others this morning I feel that $15,000 will be sufficient for the time being. This amendment is for the purpose of providing this sum as part of the House contingent fund.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For preparing and editing a new edition of the Code of the District of Columbia, as authorized and directed by law (1 U. S. C., ch. 3), fiscal year 1940, $32,500.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEOGH: Page 3, line 12, after the word "fiscal", strike out "year" and insert "years", and after "1940" insert "and 1941."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

For payment to Preston L. George, William S. Houston, John G. Nalley, and William H. Wannall, messengers on night duty during the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, $900 each; in all, $3,600, to be paid from the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, Government Printing Office, beginning in line 18 and ending in line 24, of page 3, on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, not authorized by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order so that I might make a half-minute statement?

Mr. RICH. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this item is subject to a point of order, but it has been carried in the bill for a number of years as extra compensation for these messengers who work on the Congressional Record at night. To strike this out of the bill just reduces their salary from what they have always received and, as I have stated, it has been carried in the bill for a number of years. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, these men are under civil service. They get 15 percent extra, over their regular compensation. This is divided among three men, while there are seven or eight men doing the work.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But it is something the Congress has paid for years, I may say to the gentleman. It is subject to a point of order, however.

Mr. RICH. It seems if it is proper legislation, we ought to pass the legislation in the right manner and have it brought in here properly, not bring it here under an appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cooper). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] makes a point of order, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] concedes the point of order. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The item "Procurement Division, Public Buildings Branch, Construction of Public Buildings outside the District of Columbia," in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act of 1940, is hereby amended to increase the limits of cost to the amounts indicated after each of the hereinafter-mentioned projects contained in House Document No. 177, Seventy-sixth Congress: Tempe, Ariz., post office, and so forth, $160,000; Antioch, Calif., post office, $98,000; Bellflower, Calif., post office, $125,000; Chicago, Ill. (Jackson Park Postal Station), $350,000; Ellicott City, Md., post office, and so forth, $117,000; Hamilton, Mont., post office, and so forth, $100,000; Hamlet, N. C., post office, and so forth, $90,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mahon: Page 9, at the end of line 16, add a new paragraph as follows:

"PUBLIC BUILDINGS ADMINISTRATION

"CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ACT AUGUST 25, 1937

"Construction of public buildings outside the District of Columbia: The total amount authorized to be appropriated for the 3-year program for the acquisition of sites and construction of public buildings by the paragraph under the caption 'Emergency construction of public buildings outside the District of Columbia,' contained in the 'Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937,' approved August 25, 1937 (50 Stat. 772), and increased by the 'Federal Public Buildings Appropriation Act of 1938,' approved June 21, 1938, is hereby further increased from $130,000,000 to $180,000,000, and the period of said program is hereby extended to 5 years. All applicable provisions and authority contained in such authorizations shall be operative with respect to the enlarged authorization provided herein except that the Federal Works Administrator shall be substituted for the Secretary of the Treasury where mentioned therein, and that the list from which projects are to be selected by the Postmaster General and the Federal Works Administrator, acting jointly, shall be House Document No. 177, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, dated February 20, 1939: Provided, That the Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General may also select for prosecution under this program such projects not included in such document as in their judgment are economically sound and advantageous to the public service. Toward such increased program there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000. The appropriations heretofore made under the authority of such acts, together with the appropriation contained herein, shall be consolidated into a single fund and be available toward the consummation of the entire authorized program (52 Stat. 818; 53 Stat. 672)."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom for a number of years for the Appropriations Committee to bring in an authorization, even though it is legislation, for the purpose of our public-building program outside the District of Columbia. My amendment simply endeavors to follow the same course we have formerly followed in offering an authorization for an additional post-office building program. I am sure that the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which might normally consider this matter, would be perfectly willing for the House to pass my amendment,

This amendment is supported by a Budget estimate sent down by the President. The public-buildings program is sound; it is being well administered. There is a great public demand for it. Nobody will have to apologize for a good post-office building. It is a convenience and source of pride to everybody in a community, and it serves the public for generations.

I hope the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations will not insist upon his point of order. I realize the amendment is subject to a point of order; and if the gentleman feels that he should insist upon it, naturally I withdraw the proffered amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] makes a point of order against the amendment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mahon] concedes the point of order. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I seek recognition at this time because of the fact that many Members have asked me in the past few days whether or not I propose to offer a Public Works Administration amendment to this bill. Should such an amendment be offered, of course, it is recognized that this is the proper time and place.

May I say to the Members of the House that I do not propose to offer an amendment to this bill providing for a continuation of the public-works program at this time simply and solely because of the fact that to date we have received no Budget estimate for any amount for public works under its present basis of operations, nor any request from the President to continue the operation of the public-works program under its present basis.

Being a member of the Appropriations Committee and charged with the responsibility in some small measure of helping to bring out appropriations to the House, I am going to observe the usual procedure. I shall certainly not ask my colleagues to vote for public works when I myself would not urge that course without a Budget estimate to support it and without a request from the President to carry on such a program at this time. I am a firm believer in a sound, constructive, long-range public-works program, based upon the need for such program, the amount to be limited by the condition and state of the Treasury. Undoubtedly there is much sentiment in the House and throughout the Nation for the continuation of our present public-works program, which has been honestly and efficiently administered without a breath or taint of a scandal in any shape, form, or fashion. Had all Federal agencies and all other Federal bureaus and commissions been administered as efficiently and as faithfully as has the Public Works Administration, we would have had a much better administration of governmental affairs than we have had.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Has the gentleman considered whether or not an amendment to this deficiency appropriation bill having to do with the P. W. A. would be germane and whether it would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I think it would be germane to this section. At the same time, I do not think it has the chance of the proverbial snowball of being considered by the House at this time, in view of the action taken during the past week, and, frankly, I have no criticism of what the House did in that respect.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact there is no authorization for a P. W. A. program at the present time, as I understand it. There is no statute permitting continuation of the P. W. A. beyond this fiscal year.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. If I recall correctly, the P. W. A. expires on June 30, 1940, and funds made available under this act could be used for the continuation of that program.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In that case an amendment would be germane.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I think so.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time of the Committee merely to explain the situation and to express the hope that prior to meeting here in January next the President will see fit to recommend to the Congress the continuation of the public-works program. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.] The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES CORONADO EXPOSITION COMMISSION

For all expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing Federal participation in the commemoration and observance of the four-hundredth anniversary of the explorations of Francisco Vasquez de Coronado." approved July 17, 1939, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and printing and binding, $175,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment: The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Dempsey: On page 11, line 21, after the word "elsewhere", insert "without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSERVATION AND HEALTH

Reindeer industry, Alaska: For the purchase, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem advisable, of reindeer, abattoirs, cold-storage plants, corrals and other buildings, and communication and other equipment, owned by nonnatives in Alaska, as authorized by the act of September 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 900), $720,000; and for necessary administrative expenses in connection with such purchase and the establishment and development of the reindeer industry for the benefit of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, as authorized by said act, including personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $2,300) and elsewhere, traveling expenses, erection, repair, and maintenance of corrals, fences, and other facilities, $75,000; in all, fiscal year 1940, $795,000: Provided, That under this appropriation not exceeding an average of $4 per head shall be paid for reindeer purchased from nonnative owners: Provided further, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the purchase of reindeer located on Nunivak Island.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Colmer: On page 29, strike out all the paragraph on pages 29 and 30, beginning with line 24, on page 29, and extending through line 16, on page 30.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment I referred to earlier in the day in general debate with reference to the reindeer industry in Alaska. This is an amendment to strike out of the bill the item for the purchase of the reindeer herds in Alaska. As I said then, this item has been incorporated in this deficiency bill in the closing hours of the session, and that notwithstanding the fact that on two previous occasions this House has voted out that provision and has said in no unmistakable terms that it did not think that this was the time for the Government to go into the reindeer business in Alaska.

I do not know that anything can be added to that. I know of nothing that has happened that should cause the House to reverse itself. Certainly this House has not shown any inclination in the last few weeks to become more liberal in the expenditure of public funds, as was particularly witnessed here on yesterday.

You recall from the time this item was under consideration before that it provides for the United States Government to set up another bureau within a department to put the Government in the reindeer business; and this is not the time of year for reindeer.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Is there some concern or some company or someone that owns a lot of reindeer and wants to sell them to the Federal Government? Mr. COLMER. Yes. I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that, as has already been brought out here innumerable times, some people went up to Alaska on a venture to raise reindeer in order to sell the reindeer meat in this country. They built a lot of abattoirs and a lot of other things. The venture proved to be unsuccessful and a financial failure.

Now this Government is asked, just as it is asked to do everything else, to take these slaughterhouses off the hands of these persons and buy the reindeer, setting the Government up in the reindeer business.

If this item gets by this time or the next time—and it looks as if it will be with us forever hereafter—you can go down to the Department of the Interior and you will find some high-priced officials sitting down there in fine chairs and in a fine office building administering another bureau, a bureau for the care and propagation of reindeer in Alaska.

I pointed out on three different occasions that it was just as sensible for the Government to go to the South Sea Islands and get turtles, or to the Rocky Mountains and get goats, and to set up a turtle industry or a goat industry, as to go into the reindeer business. Of course, it is fine, it is Utopian; we would like to help, but where are we going to stop? I wish again to call your attention to the fact that this House has voted twice on this proposition and said that it was not ready to put the Government into the reindeer business, that it was not ready to make this initial outlay of $795,000, which is the very first step in going into this business, one that will last as long as the Government lasts.

Mr. FADDIS. If the gentleman will yield, it is the last step, not the first step, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. COLMER. No; I do not know that. As a matter of fact, the Department has estimated that it will cost a minimum of $130,000 a year for personnel to operate this bureau. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, the welfare and almost the life of a good many of the 19,000 Eskimos in Alaska depend upon what happens to the amendment that is now before the Committee for its consideration.

The question has been asked why this matter is presented to you again in view of the action of the House on two former occasions. I can answer that. It is presented to you because this House and the Senate and the President of the United States several years ago joined in passing a bill directing that this very thing be done, and the question now is whether you meant what you were saying then when you said that the nonnative-owned reindeer of Alaska should be purchased by the Government and kept for the Eskimos. That bill was more than a mere authorization, it directed that the purchase be made. If you did not mean it, if that was only a jest, of course, you are going to vote for this amendment and kick the item out of the bill, but if you really thought you were doing right and if you still agree upon that course-and I submit that there has not been a word of testimony submitted here to change your mind-then the only thing you can do is to vote down the amendment and keep the item of appropriation in the bill.

This item, I assume, has been put in the bill partly by reason of a letter of the President to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee which appears on page 716 of the hearings on the bill in which the President said:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, July 19, 1939.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

My DEAR MR. TAYLOR: On September 1, 1937, there was enacted into law a measure reasonably calculated to insure to the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska a food supply in perpetuity by eliminating all nonnative ownership of reindeer, by providing for the conservation of the range and the protection of the herds.

Basic to the humanitarian purposes of the act is its authorization of an appropriation of $2,000,000 to purchase those herds now owned by nonnatives. No appropriation has, however, been made, although the passage of the measure was preceded by prolonged consideration, and although the provisions of the act have been supported by investigations subsequent to its passage made under the immediate direction of the chairmen of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

I am deeply interested in the efforts of these people in their struggle to preserve for the future the only controllable food supply for which the tundra areas of Alaska are suitable. In the press of other matters, I hope the commitments of the Reinder Act of 1937 may not be forgotten and that those who are dependent upon reindeer may be enabled by an adequate appropriation to regain full possession of the industry upon which their future depends, to protect their herds from the inroads of predators, to conserve the grazing areas, and otherwise to reap the full benefits of the reindeer industry.

It must be remembered that reindeer were imported to Alaska at the close of the last century to replace in some measure the indigenous food supply of the natives, which had been depleted by the expansion of American commerce and industry, and it seems only logical that we now should take the steps called for by the Reindeer Act.

I trust this matter will receive the earnest consideration of your committee and of the Congress. Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

I want to make here a sort of an argument, as we used to say in school, an argumentum ad hominem. Those who are supporting this measure and are urging its enactment are those who know the most about it, and those who are opposing it, I say with the greatest respect for them, are not nearly so well informed. The President knows something about it and, as you have heard, he has taken time in the press of matters of vast national concern to ask for consideration of this particular subject which is of such vital importance to our Eskimo citizens. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, as a result of a study of years, after being in the beginning opposed to it, is now wholeheartedly in favor of the legislation; the Committee on the Territories, with full knowledge of the subject, favors it; and your own special committee appointed by Congress to look into this very matter and report to you has reported that the appropriation should be made, because this is the only way to save the reindeer and thus to save and help the

During this past winter scarcely a week has passed that I have not received a letter or a telegram from Alaska, from someone else interested in the subject, saying that the destruction of the reindeer by the wolves has been simply devastating and that unless steps are taken soon to resume herding-and this can only be done by putting the Reindeer Act into effect—the time is near at hand when there will be few reindeer left in Alaska, and the Eskimos must become the objects of the bounty or the gifts of the Government for their food, like the Indians on reservations, or they must do as they did before the reindeer came. They must run the risk of starving.

One compelling reason this item is in the bill is because it is a matter of supreme emergency involving almost the life and death of some 19,000 citizens of the United States.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. SEGER. I am sympathetic with the gentleman's idea, and the gentleman has made a very good presentation, but I was not here in the beginning of this discussion. How many reindeer are there, and are they roaming wild there now?

Mr. DIMOND. There were about 500,000 reindeer in Alaska altogether, according to the estimate that was made at the time when the special committee made its examination of the subject in 1938.

Mr. SEGER. Who feeds them now?

Mr. DIMOND. They roam over the hills. Nobody feeds them; they roam over the tundra areas. About 180,000 were estimated to be in private ownership; but, unfortunately, the deer owned by private owners occupy most of the best range, and the herds of the natives are thus excluded from that range. The Eskimos need the range, and they need the additional deer.

Now, there is only one of two alternatives that can be followed: One is to let practically all the reindeer be destroyed. and let the natives as a consequence go on relief or face starvation; and the other is to carry out the Reindeer Act. an act which you passed and which the President has approved. There is no other alternative.

At the present time thousands of the Eskimos have no reindeer whatsoever. They need and can make excellent use of deer. The natives of several of the Aleutian Islands have asked me to aid in securing reindeer for them in order that they may have an assured supply of food. The same is true with a number of native settlements on the Alaska Peninsula. Several years ago I vainly tried to have deer supplied for the natives residing on Popof Island, but without success. Neither deer nor facilities for transporting them were available. Many of the Eskimos have only a few deer, not nearly sufficient to support themselves and their families. The making of the requested appropriation contemplates that reindeer will be supplied to all of the natives who need them and in sufficient numbers to be a real and dependable source of food. Even some of the native Indians of southeastern Alaska have asked to be supplied with reindeer and are confident that the deer will thrive in that part of Alaska.

This appropriation which is now asked is truly a conservation measure. The aim is to conserve and protect, and to make increasingly more useful, a certain supply of food for the natives of Alaska. It would be a tragedy indeed to sit idly or obstinately by and permit the really valuable resource which we have in the reindeer be virtually destroyed through lack of control, through failure to make the modest contribution necessary for its preservation. And the more important purpose is to help to make self-supporting and to keep selfsustaining a good many thousands of these native citizens of Alaska who in kindliness and generosity are not surpassed by any people of the world.

Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made here and reiterated, and every change has been rung upon the subject, that this is an appropriation to bail out somebody who is in private business—in the reindeer industry in Alaska. That is not the fact. It is true that some of the private owners may incidentally benefit from the appropriation, but it will be only an incident, and the vast benefit to be had by keeping in the bill the item now attacked will be enjoyed by the Eskimos of Alaska, who need the reindeer and need the range. If we want to help them, this is the time to do it by voting down the proposed amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the Delegate from Alaska has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] makes mention of the fact that we passed legislation 2 years ago to make this purchase of Alaskan reindeer. No one recollects that better than the Delegate from Alaska, and I think many other Members of Congress can recall; I never saw a piece of legislation that was so lobbied in order to have it put through the Congress as that particular piece of legislation. Something mysterious about the bill. The question of taking care of the people of Alaska, the Eskimo, by making a purchase of these 180,000 reindeer at $4 apiece has been kept constantly before everyone here by a man who has been lobbying here every day since we have been talking about the Government buying reindeer. He has talked with most everybody in the House, and he will receive benefits if the bill is passed, as Mr. Loman is interested in reindeer, abattoirs, corrals, and so forth. I cannot hate the man for that, but the question is, Do we want to spend $790,-000 now to buy reindeer when there are 500,000 reindeer in Alaska at the present time. More reindeer per capita of Eskimo than there are cattle per capita in the United States. The 300,000 or more of them are public reindeer on the public range owned by the United States of America. people will not starve if we do not come in and help this organization by buying these 180,000 reindeer at $4 per head.

Why does the Federal Government want abattoirs and coldstorage plants, and such things? Just putting the Government in all kinds of business. Just because this corporation foundered and has gone bankrupt. I say to the Delegate from Alaska that I have listened to the hearings in the Appropriations Committee for the last 4 years. The Delegate from Alaska came before the committee several years ago, but he did not mention anything about the Government going in there and buying 180,000 reindeer until that bill was passed. There was no mention of it at all until after the bill was passed, and he then came before us time after time, and we gave him the money he said would be necessary to take care of the Eskimo, but he never mentioned the fact that we ought to go in there and spend $790,000. What a change of heart he has had.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. Yes. I yield to the distinguished gentleman, the Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. DIMOND. The gentleman understands that I was appearing before the Committee on Appropriations, and it would have been entirely futile for me to ask for an appropriation before there was an authorization, and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I introduced the reindeer bill myself and talked about it long before it was

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, previous to that time nothing was ever mentioned before by the gentleman before the committee, before he introduced that reindeer bill.

Mr. DIMOND rose.

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield any more, because I have not the time. If I am in error I shall beg the gentleman's pardon, but I am pretty sure that I am correct. I say to the Members of Congress that I am going to insert in the RECORD at this point, if I may, a list of the appropriations for 1940 showing that the regular appropriation bills that have come in have appropriated $9,607,278,377.28, and that does not include many appropriation bills that have been passed in the last week. We are going to receive an estimate of $5,669,000,000, as stated by the President, so that we will have appropriated $4,000,000,000 more than we will have received for 1940, a terrible situation. Instead of getting our gap between income and outgo closer together it is getting farther apart and it does not look as if we will ever have a balanced Budget unless we stop this ruthless spending.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the tables of appropriations to which I referred, at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Income, 1940 (estimate)_____ Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, of course if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Colmer] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] are in favor of extending the doubtful blessings of a system of paternalism, such as the W. P. A., to the Eskimo in Alaska, then the thing for them to do is to continue their opposition to this item in this appropriation bill. This item to purchase the reindeer now belonging to the white owners and giving them to the Eskimo is an honest attempt upon the part of the Department of the Interior to make the Eskimo self-supporting. It is the result of recommendations and findings of various committees and officials of this Government who have visited Alaska. Their recommendations along this line have been almost unanimous. The last committee which visited Alaska and investigated this matter spent some $50,000 in reaching their conclusion, and recommended that the reindeer of the white owners be purchased and that all of the reindeer be made the property of the Eskimo in Alaska. In doing this we will furnish the Eskimo of Alaska with means which will enable them to largely provide for their own existence. We will add some 350,000 acres to the grazing territory in the United States, and we will put on its feet the only livestock industry which it is possible to operate in Alaska.

In view of the fact that the findings of the various committees and the recommendations of the various officials who have thoroughly investigated the matter, I hope the facts will be borne in mind this afternoon and that this item for the purchase of the reindeer will be retained in the appropriation bill.

In conclusion I want to say this, that when you think of $4 a head for reindeer, that $4 is purchasing a reindeer much more cheaply than you can purchase a medium-grade sheep.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. In that connection the bill says-

That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the purchase of reindeer located on Nunivak Island.

Does the gentleman know how many reindeer are on that island?

Mr. FADDIS. I do not. Perhaps the gentleman from Alaska could tell the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DIMOND. If the gentleman will yield, I understand there are about 15,000 reindeer on Nunivak Island. They were placed there some years ago and are under the supervision of the Biological Survey.

Mr. TERRY. How much do you expect to pay for the reindeer on that island? There is no limitation on the price.

Mr. DIMOND. I do not know. If the parties cannot agree on the price, the only thing that can be done is to bring an action in court and have the price fixed in court under the power of eminent domain.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. Four dollars a head is certainly not excessive, in view of the fact that Canada paid $65 a head for the same reindeer.

Mr. FADDIS. That is true. Four dollars a head is less than you can purchase a good sheep for.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the House by an overwhelming vote took a position in favor of economy and retrenchment in the expenditures of our Federal Government. A great majority of the Members no doubt realize that our Federal Government is heading for bankruptcy. This New Deal spending spree must be curbed. If Uncle Sam continues to spend and spend and borrow and spend much longer, he will soon be bankrupt and the American people will meet inflation face to face. Inflation with its devastating resultssuffering, misery, despair, and distress-such as our people have never before witnessed.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment strikes from the bill an appropriation of $720,000 from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury. This $720,000 appropriation is to put Uncle Sam in the reindeer business in Alaska. This proposition was thoroughly considered by this Congress on two different occasions and rejected by an overwhelming vote.

I intend to practice economy today, as I did yesterday and will do in the future, even though the adoption of this pending amendment might prohibit "Honest Harold" Ickes, the New Deal Secretary of the Interior, from operating reindeer slaughterhouses, cold-storage plants, ranches, and other socialistic Government activities for Uncle Sam in Alaska.

Mr. Chairman, in the past our New Deal brethren talked much about two chickens in every pot and two cars in every garage. Should they raid the almost bankrupt Federal Treasury of $720,000 to set Uncle Sam up in the reindeer business in Alaska, they can go into their campaign next fall with a slogan, "24 reindeer for every Eskimo man, woman, and child in Alaska," under the soviet conception of government in the slaughterhouse business, government in the cold-storageplant business, government in the ranch business, and so forth. Insofar as putting Uncle Sam in the reindeer business is concerned, this $720,000 is just the beginning. This year Uncle will raise reindeer and slaughter them. year our New Deal "brain trusters" will ask for additional appropriations so that Uncle Sam can go into the reindeer milk, cheese, and butter business and compete with our American dairy interests as well as our American slaughterhouses, cold-storage plants, and ranches.

Mr. Chairman, a vote for this amendment is a vote for economy and a vote to keep Uncle Sam out of unfair, subsidized competition in fields of private business endeavor. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KEEFE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. KEEFE. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been allotted, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. KEEFE. I was on my feet all during the time the Chairman was allotting that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is sorry, but the gentleman's name is not included.

Mr. KEEFE. It is rather unusual that a man of my size could not be seen when I was here all during that time. The CHAIRMAN. It is quite unusual, but the Chair regrets it is true.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has been recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I am not one of the Members of the House who ordinarily recommends or votes for increased appropriations, but this particular item has been made a political football around this House so long that I feel the time has come to properly dispose of it.

It seems to me it is about time we approve this authorization which will take care of 19,000 Eskimos in Alaska and see that they get a livelihood. The Congress passed the authorization bill turning these reindeer over to the Eskimos, and the interested parties have been waiting patiently for Congress to provide the appropriation so that this matter may be cleaned up.

I can readily see, with all of the money that is being spent by the Federal Government, that it is a good opportunity to have a little fund with the reindeer and with Santa Claus, but let us forget about it and let us vote this appropriation and get the matter off our records. Afer all, it is but a drop in the bucket when you consider the billions and billions of dollars that are being spent for every conceivable project under the sun, some worthy and a great many of them unworthy, at the expense of the American people.

This is a worthy item and should have your serious consideration and I hope that the committee will approve the item and vote down the amendment.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. Does the gentleman know of any other method by which the Eskimos can be made self-supporting in Alaska?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As far as I have been able to learn, this is the only means of livelihood they have up there in that barren north country.

Mr. MAAS. And this appropriation will be a lot less than what it would cost to support the Eskimos on the public dole, will it not?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It would seem so to me; and, after all, they are American citizens and we in the rest of the United States owe a duty to them to help them provide for their own support. It is the duty of Congress to see that they are taken care of in a proper way. I hope you will vote down the amendment and approve the recommendation made by the Appropriations Committee with reference to this item.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Keefe] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes not to be taken out of the time heretofore allotted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin for 2 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to record this observation in connection with the pending amendment. As a new Member of Congress who had heard nothing about this reindeer proposition, I listened attentively to the arguments that were made when this matter was before the Congress before. I voted against the reindeer appropriation. I propose to vote for this appropriation in this deficiency bill and against this amendment striking it out because in the interim I have had an opoprtunity to investigate this situation, and I think it would be too bad if we permitted a very worthy project to be laughed out of this Hall of Congress by a lot of ridicule and a lot of misinformation. [Applause.]

Those who know the facts in reference to this situation and those who know the conditions best—and I have taken the time to investigate—are solidly behind this proposal. It seems to me it comes with poor grace to talk about economy at this time, when this proposal simply asks that this Congress do the very thing that the Congress has heretofore committed itself to do, a proposal that will do something for those people in Alaska that they are entitled to. I regret that I voted against it before, but I did so under a misapprehension of the facts. Since that time my investigation and research have disclosed the true facts, and common sense and simple justice demand that the amendment be voted down. Thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Mexico rise?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to advise the gentleman that his name does not appear on the list of those seeking recognition.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet with the others.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 minutes, not to be taken out of the time already allotted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, some time ago when this particular matter came before the Committee on the Territories I was not very favorably impressed with it. We sat in hearings for many days. I finally became convinced, as a result of testimony and further as a result of an investigation made by the senior Senator from Oklahoma and the senior Senator from South Dakota. After their investigation was completed this item was brought in, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor], insisted that an additional committee be sent to Alaska to investigate further. As a result of that second committee's report, which was unanimous, that this program should be carried out, the item again came up.

We cannot talk about economy where $700,000 or $900,000 is concerned, and failure to appropriate that sum means that the Government will take over the keeping of about 19,000 Eskimos, for that is exactly what we are going to have to do if we fail to keep this item in the bill.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. The record of the hearings say there are between 13,000 and 15,000 natives. Where does the gentleman get the figure 19,000 when the committee report says 13,000 to 15,000?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The information we have is that there are between 15,000 and 20,000 natives concerned.

Permit me to say that I have a friend in New York who is engaged in the fur business and who advanced $85,000 to help feed the Eskimos up there and give them supplies. They in return were to pay him back with furs. He has lost every dollar he has given them, because the furs were

Let me submit to you that the Eskimos, even though they are far away from your district and my district, are still a part of the United States of America, and I for one, although I have no greater interest in Alaska than any of you should have, am not going to stand here and vote to take this item out of this bill when it has been recommended by the Budget, the President of the United States, and by every commission that has ever investigated the matter. I say that the gentleman from Mississippi, who is one of my close friends, is misinformed upon this subject. I hope that his amendment is defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 31/2 minutes.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I have spoken upon this matter on several previous occasions. As a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations having to do with the Interior Department, I have had opportunity to become more familiar with it possibly than the average Member of the House. When the legislation was passed in the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress authorizing $2,000,000 for this purpose of purchasing reindeer, if such sum were necessary, I was very much opposed to it. When the Budget submitted an item to our committee we had extended hearings and we refused to write the item into the bill in the Seventy-fifth Congress. It went to the Senate and there it was written in. In conference, as one of the conferees, I joined with the other House conferees and objected to its being included, because it did not seem to be a proper governmental expenditure, and it was stricken out.
